Such guides set over the several congregations will mislead them, by intilling into them puritanical and superstitious principles, that they may the more securely exercise their presbyterian tyranny.

Walton.

PUR

PURITANISM. n. f. [from puritan.] The notions of a puritan.

A serious and impartial examination of the grounds, as well of popery as puritanism, according to that measure of understanding God hath afforded me.

Walton.

PURITY. n. f. [purité, Fr. puritas, Lat.]

1. Cleanness; freedom from foulness or dirt.

Is it the purity of a linen vesture, which some so fear would defile the purity of the priest? Holyday.
Her urn

Pours streams select, and purity of waters.

Prior.

The inspired air does likewise often communicate to the lungs unwholesome vapours, and many hurtful effluvia, which, mingling with the blood, corrupt its purity.

Blackmore.

From the body's purity, the mind
Receives a secret aid.

Thomson.

2. Freedom from guilt; innocence.

Death sets us safely on shore in our long-expected Canaan, where there are no temptations, no danger of falling, but eternal purity and immortal joys secure our innocence and happiness for ever.

Wake.

Every thing about her resembles the purity of her soul, and she is always clean without, because she is always pure within.

Laro.

3. Chastity; freedom from contamination of sexes.

Could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and her marriage vow.

Shakspeare.

PURL. n. f. [This is justly supposed by Minsbew to be contracted from purfle.]

1. An embroidered and puckered border.
Himself came in next after a triumphant chariot made of carnation velvet, enriched with purl and pearl.

Sidney.

The jaggings of pinks is like the inequality of oak leaves; but they seldom have any small purls.

Bacon.

2. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of medicated malt liquor, in which wormwood and aromatics are infused.

TO PURL. v. n. [Of this word it is doubtful what is the primitive signification; if it is referred originally to the appearance of a quick stream, which is always dimpled on the service, it may come from purl, pucker or fringe; but if, as the use of authors seems to show, it relates to the found, it must be derived from porla, Swedish, to murmur, according to Lye.]

To murmur; to flow with a gentle noise.

Tones are not so apt to procure sleep, as some other sounds; as the wind, the purling of water, and humming of bees.

Bacon.

Instruments that have returns, as trumpets; or flexions, as cornets; or are drawn up, and put from, as sacbuts, have a purling sound; but the recorder or flute, that have none of these inequalities, give a clear sound.

Bacon.

All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet, or purling brook, or shell, or fin.

Milton.

My flow'ry theme,
A painted mistress, or a purling stream.

Whilst your purple hands do reek and smok, Falsify your pleasure. Shakspeare.

Cruel and sudden, hast thou since Purpled thy nail in blood of innocence?
Not alone, while thou
Visit'st my slumbers nightly; or when morn Purpled the east. Milton.

Throw hither all your quaint enamel'd eyes,
That on the green turf suck the honied show'rs,
And purple all the ground with vernal show'rs. Milton.

Aurora had but newly chas'd the night,
And purple'd o'er the sky with blushing light. Dryden.

Not with more glories in th' ethereal plain,
The sun first rises o'er the purpled main. Pope.

PUR

Reclining soft in blissful bow'rs, Purpled sweet with springing flow'rs. Fenton.

PURPLE. n. s. The purple colour; a purple dress.

O'er his lucid arms
A vest of military purple flow'd
Livelier than Meliboean, or the grain
Of Sarra, worn by kings and heroes old. Milton.

May be it has been sometimes thought harsh in those who were born in purple to look into abuses with a stricter eye than their predecessors; but elected kings are presumed to come upon the foot of reformation. Davenant.

PURPLES. n. s. [without a singular.] Spots of a livid red, which break out in malignant fevers; a purple fever.

TO PURPORT. v. a. [from the noun.] To intend; to tend to show.

There was an article against the reception of the rebels, purporting, that if any such rebel should be required of the prince confederate, that the prince confederate should command him to avoid the country. Bacon.

They in most grave and solemn wise unfolded Matter, which little purported, but words

PURPOSE. n. s. [from propos, Fr. propositum, Latin.]

1. Intention; design.

He quit the house of purpose, that their punishment
Might have the freer course. Shakspeare.

Change this purpose,
Which being so horrible, so bloody, must Lead on to some foul issue. Shakspeare.

He with troops of horsemen beset the passages of purpose, that when the army should set forward, he might in the streights, fit for his purpose, set upon them. Knolles.

And I persuade me God hath not permitted
His strength again to grow, were not his purpose
To use him farther yet. Milton.

That kind of certainty which doth not admit of any doubt, may serve us as well to all intents and purposes, as that which is infallible. Wilkins.

St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this very purpose. Barnet.

They, who are desirous of a name in painting, should read and make observations of such things as they find for their purpose. Dryden.

He travelled the world, on purpose to converse with the most learned men. Guardian.

Their design is a war, whenever they can open it with a prospect of succeeding to purpose. Temple.

Such first principles will serve us to very little purpose, and we shall be as much at a loss with, as without them, if they may, by any human power, such as is the will of our teachers, or opinions of our companions, be altered or lost in us. Locke.

He that would relish success to purpose, should keep his passion cool, and his expectation low. Collier.

PUR

What the Romans have done is not worth notice, having had little occasion to make use of this art, and what they have of it to purpose being borrowed from Aristotle. Baker.

3. Instance; example.

'Tis common for double-dealers to be taken in their own snares, as for the purpose in the matter of power. L'Estrange.

TO PURPOSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To intend; to design; to resolve.

What David did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform. Hooker.

It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,
To curb the nobility. Shakspeare.

The whole included race his purpos'd prey. Milton.

Oaths were not purpos'd more than law,
To keep the good and just in awe,
But to confine the bad and sinful,
Like moral cattle in a pinfold. Hudibras.

TO PURPOSE. v. n. To have an intention; to have a design.

I am purpos'd, that my mouth shall not transgress. Psalms.

PURSUANT. adj. [from pur sue.] Done in consequence or prosecution of any thing.

To PURSUE. v. n. [poursuivre, Fr.]

1. To chase; to follow in hostility.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;

Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues.

When Abraham heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, and pursued.

To thy speed add wings,
Left with a whip of scorpions. I pursue Thy lingering.

2. To prosecute; to continue.

As righteousness tendeth to life; so he that pursueth evil, pursueth it to his own death.

Insatiate to pursue Vain war with heaven.

I will pursue
This ancient story, whether false or true.
When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end.

3. To imitate; to follow as an example.

The fame of ancient matrons you pursue,
And stand a blameless pattern to the new.

4. To endeavour to attain.

Let us not then pursue
A splendid vassalage.
We happiness pursue; we fly from pain;
Yet the pursuit, and yet the flight is vain.
What nature has deny'd fools will pursue,
As apes are ever walking upon two.

To PURSUE. v. a. To go on; to proceed.

A gallicism.
I have, pursues Carneades, wondered chymists should not consider.

PURSUER. n. s. [from pur sue.] One who follows in hostility.

Fled with the rest,
And falling from a hill, he was so bruised,
That the pursuers took him.
His swift pursuers from heav'n's gates discern
Th' advantage, and descending tread us down
Thus drooping.

Like a declining statesman left forlorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn.

PURSUITE. n. s. [poursuite, Fr.]

1. The act of following with hostile intention.

Arm, warriors, arm for fight! the foe at hand,
Whom fled we thought, will save us long pursuit.

2. Endeavour to attain.

This means they long propos'd, but little gain'd,
Yet after much pursuit, at length obtain'd.
Its honours and vanities are continually passing before him, and inviting his pursuit.
He has annexed a secret pleasure to the idea of any thing that is new or uncommon, that he might encourage us in the pursuit after knowledge, and engage us to search into the wonders of his creation.

Addison.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions, and to the removal of those uneasinesses it feels in its longings after them.

Locke.

3. Prosecution; continuance of endeavour.

He concluded with sighs and tears, to conjure them, that they would no more press him to give his consent to a thing so contrary to his reason, the execution whereof would break his heart, and that they would give over further pursuit of it.

Clarendon.

PURSUIVANT. n. s. [poursuivant, Fr.] A state messenger; an attendant on the heralds.

How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The fitting skies, like flying pursuivants.

These grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.

Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising.

For helmets, crests, mantles, and supporters, I leave the reader to Edmond Bolton, Gerard Leigh, Jon Ferne, and John Guillim Portsmouth, pursuivants of arms, who have diligently laboured in armory.

The pursuivants came next,
And like the heralds each his scutcheon bore.

PURSY. adj. [poussif, French.] Short-breathed and fat.

In the fatness of these purisy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea crouch and woo for leave to do it good.

Now breathless wrong,
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease,
And purisy insolence shall break his wind
With fear and horrid flight.

An hostess dowager,
Grown fat and purisy by retail
Of pots of beer and bottled ale.

By these, the Medes
Perfume their breaths, and cure old purisy men.

PURTEANCE. n. s. [appertenance, Fr.] The pluck of an animal.

Roast the lamb with fire, his head with his legs and with the purteance thereof.

The shaft against a rib did glance,
And gall'd him in the purteance.

craftily qualified too; and behold what innovation
it makes here. Shakspeare.

They would report that they had records for twenty thousand years, which must needs be a very great untruth, unless we will qualify it, expounding their years not of the revolution of the sun, but of the moon. Abbot.

It hath so pleased God to provide for all living creatures, wherewith he hath filled the world, that such inconveniences, as we contemplate afar off, are found by trial and the witness of men's travels, to be so qualified, as their is no portion of the earth made in vain. Raleigh.

So happy 'tis you move in such a sphere,
As your high majesty with awful fear
In human breasts might qualify that fire,
Which kindled by those eyes had flamed higher. Waller.

Children should be early instructed in the true estimate of things, by opposing the good to the evil, and compensating or qualifying one thing with another. L'Esrange.

My proposition I have qualified with the word, often; thereby making allowance for those cases, wherein men of excellent minds may, by a long practice of virtue, have rendered even the heights and rigours of it delightful. Atterbury.

5. To ease; to assuage.

He balms and herbs thereto apply'd,
And evermore with mighty spells them charm'd,

QUALITY. n. f. [qualitas, Latin; qualité, French.]

1. Nature relatively considered.

These, being of a far other nature and quality, are not so strictly or everlastingly commanded in scripture. Hooker.

Other creatures have not judgment to examine the quality of that which is done by them, and therefore in that they do, they neither can accuse nor approve themselves. Hooker.

Since the event of an action usually follows the nature or quality of it, and the quality follows the rule directing it, it concerns a man, in the framing of his actions, not to be deceived in the rule. South.

The power to produce any idea in our mind, I call quality of the subject, wherein that power is. Locke.

2. Property; accidental adjunct.

In the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shakspeare.

No sensible qualities, as light and colour, heat and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense: these qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions upon our nerves from objects without, according to their various modification and position. Bentley.

3. Particular efficacy.

O, mickle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakspeare.

4. Disposition; temper.

To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Shakspeare.

Skinner.] A doubt; a difficulty; an uncertainty. A low word.

QUANTITATIVE. adj. [quantitativus, Latin.]
Estimable according to quantity.

This explication of rarity and density, by the composition of substance with quantity, may give little satisfaction to such who are apt to conceive therein no other composition or resolution, but such as our senses shew us, in compounding and dividing bodies according to quantitative parts. Digby.

QUANTITY. n. f. [quantité, Fr. quantitas,
Latin.]

1. That property of any thing which may be encreased or diminished.

Quantity is what may be increased or diminished. Cbeysne.

2. Any indeterminate weight or measure:

QUARREL. n. f. [querelle, French.]

1. A breach of concord.

You and I may engage in this question, as far as either of us shall think profitable, without any the least beginning of a quarrel, and then that will competently be removed from such, as of which you cannot hope to see an end. Hammond.

2. A brawl; a petty fight; a scuffle.

If I can fasten but one cup upon him,
With that which he hath drank to-night already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offence,
As my young mistress' dog. Shakspeare.

3. A dispute; a contest.

The part, which in this present quarrel striveth against the current and stream of laws, was a long while nothing feared. Hooker.

It were a matter of more trouble than necessity, to repeat in this quarrel what has been alledged by the worthies of our church. Holyday.

As if earth too narrow were for fate,
On open seas their quarrels they debate;
In hollow wood they floating armies bear,
And force imprison'd winds to bring 'em near. Dryden.

4. A cause of debate.

I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable. Shakspeare.

If not in service of our God we fought,
In meaner quarrel if this sword were shaken,
Well might thou gather in the gentle thought,
So fair a princess should not be forsaken. Fairfax.

A bungling cobbler, that was ready to starve at his own trade, changes his quarter, and sets up for a doctor. L'Estrange.

4. The place where soldiers are lodged or stationed.

Where is lord Stanley quarter'd?
—Unless I have mista'en my quarters much,
His regiment lies half a mile
South from the mighty power of the king. Shaks.

Thou canst defend as well as get,
And never hadst one quarter beat up yet. Cowley.

The quarters of the sev'ral chiefs they show'd,
Here Phoenix, here Achilles made abode. Dryden.

It was high time to shift my quarters. Spectator.

5. Proper station.

They do best, who, if they cannot but admit love, yet make it keep quarter, and sever it wholly from their serious affairs. Bacon.

Swift to their sev'ral quarters hasten then
The cumbrous elements. Milton.

6. Remission of life; mercy granted by a conqueror.

QUA

He magnified his own clemency, now they were at his mercy, to offer them quarter for their lives, if they gave up the castle. Clarendon.

When the cocks and lambs lie at the mercy of cats and wolves, they must never expect better quarter. L'Estrange.

Discover the opinion of your enemies, which is commonly the truest; for they will give you no quarter, and allow nothing to complaisance. Dryd.

7. Treatment shown to an enemy.

To the young if you give any tolerable quarter, you indulge them in their idleness and ruin them. Collier.

Mr. Wharton, who detected some hundreds of the bishop's mistakes, meets with very ill quarter from his lordship. Swift.

8. Friendship; amity; concord. Not now in use.

Friends, all but now,
In quarter and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed, and then, but now Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shaks.

9. A measure of eight bushels.

The soil so fruitful that an acre of land well ordered will return 200 bushels or 25 quarter of corn. Heylin.

10. False quarter is a cleft or chink in a quarter of a horse's hoof from top to bottom; it generally happens on the inside of it, that being the weakest and thinnest part.

To QUARTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into four parts.

A thought that quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
And ever three parts coward. Shakspeare.

2. To divide; to break by force.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire. Shakspeare.

Mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war. Shaks.

3. To divide into distinct regions.

Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For ev'ry fixt and ev'ry wand'ring star. Dryden.

4. To station or lodge soldiers.

When they hear the Roman horses neigh,
Behold their quarter'd fires,
They will waste their time upon our noise,
To know from whence we are. Shakspeare.

Where is lord Stanley quarter'd?
—His regiment lies half a mile south. Shakspeare.

They o'er the barren shore pursue their way,
Where quarter'd in their camp, the fierce Thessalians lay. Dryden.

5. To lodge; to fix on a temporary dwelling.

They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd. Shakspeare.

You have quartered all the foul language upon me, that could be raked out of Billingsgate. Spec.

He fed on vermin;
And when these fail'd, he'd suck his claws,
And quarter himself upon his paws. Hudibras.

7. To bear as an appendage to the hereditary arms.

The first being compounded of argent and azure, is the coat of Beauchamp of Hack in the county of Somerset, now quartered by the earl of Hertford. Peacbam.

QUARTERAGE. n. s. [from quarter.] A quarterly allowance.

He us'd two equal ways of gaining,
By hindring justice or maintaining;
To many a whore gave privilege,
And whipp'd for want of quarterage. Hudibras.

QUARTERDAY. n. s. [quarter and day.] One of the four days in the year, on which rent or interest is paid.

However rarely his own rent-days occurred, the indigent had two and fifty quarter-daies returning in his year. Fell.

The usurer would be very well satisfied to have all the time annihilated, that lies between the present moment and next quarter-day. Speculator.

QUA

QUARTERDECK. n. s. [quarter and deck.] The short upper deck.

QUARTERLY. adj. [from quarter.] Containing a fourth part.

The moon makes four quarterly seasons within her little year or month of consecution. Holder.

From the obliquity of the ecliptick to the equator arise the diurnal differences of the sun's right ascension, which finish their variations in each quadrant of the ecliptick, and this being added to the former inequality from eccentricity, makes these quarterly and seemingly irregular inequalities of natural days. Bentley.

QUARTERLY. adv. Once in a quarter of a year.

QUARTERMASTER. n. s. [quarter and master.] One who regulates the quarters of soldiers.

The quartermaster general was marking the ground for the encampment of the covering army. Taiter.

QUARTERN. n. s. A gill or the fourth part of a pint.

QUARTERSTAFF. n. s. A staff of defence: so called, I believe, from the manner of using it; one hand being placed at the middle, and the other equally between the middle and the end.

His quarterstaff, which he could ne'er forsake, Hung half before, and half behind his back. Dryden.

Immense riches he squandered away at quarter-staff and cudgel play, in which he challenged all the country. Arbutnot.

QUARTILE. n. s. An aspect of the planets, when they are three signs or ninety degrees distant from each other, and is marked thus □.

Mars and Venus in a quartile move
My pangs of jealousy for Ariet's love. Dryden.

QUARTO. n. s. [quartus, Lat.] A book in which every sheet, being twice doubled, makes four leaves.

Our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems; then folio's and quarto's were the proper sizes, as volumes in octavo are now. Watts.

To QUASH. v. a. [quassen, Dutch; squacciare, Italian; quasso, Latin.]

1. To crush; to squeeze.

The whales
Against sharp rocks, like reeling vessels quash'd, Though huge as mountains, are in pieces dash'd. Waller.

2. To subdue suddenly.

'Twas not the spawn of such as these,
That dy'd with Punick blood the conquer'd seas,
And quash'd the stern Æacides. Rescommon.

Our the-confederates keep pace with us in quashing the rebellion, which had begun to spread itself among part of the fair sex. Addison.

3. [causus, Lat. causer, Fr.] To annul; to nullify; to make void: as, the indictment was quashed.

To QUASH. v. n. To be shaken with a noise.

A thin and fine membrane strait and closely adhering to keep it from quashing and shaking. Ray.

The water in this dropfly, by a sudden jirk, may be heard to quash. Sharp.

QUASH. n. s. A pompion.

QUARTERCOUSINS. As they are not quarter-cousins, as it is commonly spoken cater-cousins, plus ne sont pas de quatre cousins, they are not of the first four degrees of kindred, that is, they are not friends. Skinner.

QUATERNARY. n. s. [quaternarius, Lat.] The number four.

The objections against the quaternary of elements and ternary of principles, needed not to be opposed so much against the doctrines themselves. Boyle.

QUE

QUATERNION. n. s. [quaternio, Lat.] The number four.

Air and the elements! the eldest birth
Of nature's womb, than in quaternion run Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix
And nourish all things; let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Maker still new praise. Milton.

I have not in this scheme of these nine quaternions of consonants, distinct known characters, whereby to express them, but must repeat the same. Holder.

QUATERNITY. n. s. [quaternus, Latin.] The number four.

The number of four stands much admired, not only in the quaternity of the elements, which are the principles of bodies, but in the letters of the name of God. Brown.

QUATRAIN. n. s. [quatrain, French.] A stanza of four lines rhyming alternately; as,

Say, Stella, what is love, whose fatal pow'r
Robs virtue of content, and youth of joy?
What nymph or goddess in a luckless hour
Disclod'd to light the mischief-making boy?
Mrs. Mulso.

I have writ my poem in quatrains or stanzas of four in alternate rhyme, because I have ever judged them of greater dignity for the sound and number, than any other verse in use. Dryden.

To QUAVER. v. n. [cpavan, Saxon.]

1. To shake the voice; to speak or sing with a tremulous voice.

Miso sitting on the ground with her knees up, and her hands upon her knees, tuning her voice with many a quavering cough, thus discoursed. Sidney.

The division and quavering, which please so much in musick, have an agreement with the glittering of light playing upon a wave. Bacon.

Now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhythms with suiting notes,
And quaver unharmonious. Philips.

We shall hear her quavering them half a minute after us, to some sprightly airs of the opera. Addison.

2. To tremble; to vibrate.

A membrane, stretched like the head of a drum, is to receive the impulse of the sound, and to vibrate or quaver according to its reciprocal motions. Ray.

If the eye and the finger remain quiet, these colours vanish in a second minute of time, but if the finger be moved with a quavering motion, they appear again. Newton.

QUAY. n. s. [quai, Fr.] A key; an artificial bank to the sea or river, on which goods are conveniently unladen.

QUEACHY. adj. [I know not whence derived; perhaps originally quaky, quaggy, or quashy.] Unsolid; unsound; boggy. Not in use.

The boggy meads and queachy fens below. Drayton.

Goodwin's queachy sand. Drayton.

QUEAN. n. s. [cpaan, Sax. a barren cow; hopenen, in the laws of Canute, a strumpet.] A worthless woman, generally a strumpet.

As fit as the nail to his hole, or as a scolding quean to a wrangling knave. Shakspeare.

This well they understand like cunning queans,

Such is that sprinkling, which some careless quean flirts on you from her mop. Swift.

QUEASINESS. n. s. [from queasy.] The sickness of a nauseated stomach.

QUEASY. adj. [Of uncertain etymology.]

1. Sick with nausea.

He, queasy with his insolence, already
Will their good thoughts call from him. Shakspeare.

Whether a rotten state and hope of gain,
Or to disuse me from the queasy pain
Of being belov'd and loving,
Out push me first. Donne.

2. Fastidious; squeamish.

I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedict, that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice.

Shakspeare.

The humility of Gregory the Great would not admit the stile of bishop, but the ambition of Boniface made no scruple thereof, nor have queasy resolutions been harboured in their successors ever since.

Brown.

Men's stomachs are generally so queasy in these cases, that it is not safe to overload them.

Government of the Tongue.

Without question,

Their conscience was too queasy of digestion.

Dryden.

3. Causing nausea.

I have one thing of a queasy question, Which I must ask.

Shakspeare.

To QUECK. v. n. To shrink; to show pain; perhaps to complain. Not in use.

The lads of Sparta were accustomed to be whipped at altars, without so much as quecking.

Bacon.

QUEEN. n. f. [cpen, Saxon, a woman, a wife, the wife of a king.]

1. The wife of a king.

He was lapt

In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand Of his queen mother.

Shakspeare.

2. A woman who is a sovereign of a kingdom.

That queen Elizabeth lived sixty-nine, and reigned forty-five years, means no more than that the duration of her existence was equal to sixty-nine, and the duration of her government to forty-five annual revolutions of the sun.

Locke.

Have I a queen

Past by my fellow rulers of the world?

Have I refus'd their blood to mix with yours,

And raise new kings from so obscure a race?

Dryden.

To QUEEN. v. n. To play the queen.

A three-pence bow'd would hire me,

Old as I am, to queen it.

Shakspeare.

Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,

Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,

But milk my ewes and weep.

Shakspeare.

QUEEN-APPLE. n. f. A species of apple.

The queen-apple is of the summer kind, and a good cyder apple mixed with others.

Mortimer.

Her cheeks with kindly claret spread,

Aurora like new out of bed,

Or like the fresh queen-apple's side,

Blushing at sight of Phœbus' pride.

Sidney.

QUEENING. n. f. An apple.

The winter queening is good for the table.

Mort.

QUEER. adj. [Of this word the original is not known: a correspondent supposes a queer man to be one who has a quære to his name in a list.] Odd; strange; original; particular.

He never went to bed till two in the morning, because he would not be a queer fellow; and was every now and then knocked down by a constable, to signalize his vivacity.

Spectator.

QUEERLY. adv. [from queer.] Particularly; oddly.

QUEERNESS. n. f. [from queer.] Oddness; particularity.

QUEEST. n. f. [from quesus, Lat. Skinner.] A ringdove; a kind of wild pigeon.

To QUELL. v. a. [cpellan, Saxon.] To crush; to subdue: originally, to kill.

What avails

Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd with pain,

Which all subdues, and makes remiss the hands Of mightiest?

Milton.

Compassion quell'd

His best of man, and gave him up to tears

A space; till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess.

Milt.

This quell'd her pride, but other doubts remain'd, That once disdain'd, she might be disdain'd.

Dryden.

He is the guardian of the publick quiet, appointed to restrain violence, to quell seditions and tumults, and to preserve that peace which preserves the world.

Atterbury.

To QUELL. v. n. To die. Spenser.

QUELL. n. f. [from the verb.] Murder. Not in use.

What cannot we put upon

His spongy followers, who shall bear the guilt

Of our great quell.

Shakspeare.

QUE'LLER. n. f. [from quell.] One that crushes or subdues.

Hail son of the most high,

Queller of Satan, on thy glorious work

Now enter.

Milton.

QUE'LLQUECHOSE. n. f. [French.] A trifle; a kickshaw.

From country grafts to comfitures of court,

Or city's quelquechose, let not report

My mind transport.

Donne.

To QUEME. v. n. [cpeman, Saxon.] To please. An old word. Skinner.

To QUENCH. v. a.

1. To extinguish fire.

Since stream, air, sand, mine eyes and ears conspire,

What hope to quench, where each thing blows the fire?

Sidney.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench. Shakspeare.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,

Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakspeare.

The fire had power in the water, forgetting his own virtue; and the water forgot his own quenching nature.

Wisdom.

Milk quencheth wild-fire better than water, because it entereth better.

Bacon.

Subdu'd in fire the stubborn metal lies;

One draws and blows reciprocating air,

Others to quench the hissing mass prepare.

You have already quench'd sedition's brand,

And zeal, which burnt it, only warms the land.

Dryden.

When your work is forged, do not quench it in water to cool it, but throw it down upon the floor or hearth to cool of itself; for the quenching of it in water will harden it.

Moxon.

2. To still any passion or commotion; to repress any motion of the mind good or bad.

But if all aim but this be levell'd false,

The supposition of the lady's death

Will quench the wonder of her infamy. Shakspeare.

Beleech God, that he will inflame thy heart with this heavenly fire of devotion; and when thou hast obtained it, beware that thou neither quench it by any wilful sin, or let it go out again for want of stirring it up and employing it.

Duty of Man.

3. To allay thirst.

Every draught to him, that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and diseases, a drowning of the spirits.

South.

4. To destroy.

When death's form appears, she seareth not

An utter quenching or extinguishment;

She would be glad to meet with such a lot,

That so she might all future ill prevent.

Davies.

Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally very cold, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retund the edge of any weapon.

Ray.

To QUENCH. v. n. To cool; to grow cool.

Dost thou think, in time

She will not quench, and let instructions enter

Where folly now possesses?

Shakspeare.

QUE'NCHABLE. adj. [from quench.] That may be quenched.

QUE'NCHER. n. f. [from quench.] Extinguisher; one that quenches.

QUE'NCHLESS. adj. [from quench.] Unextinguishable.

Come, bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,

I dare your quenchless fury to more rage.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,

He fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire.

Craslow.

QUE'RELE. n. f. [querela, Latin; querelle, French.] A complaint to a court,

A circumduction obtains not in causes of appeal, but in causes of first instance and simple querela only.

Ayliffe.

QUE'RENT. n. f. [querens, Latin.] The complainant; the plaintiff.

QUERIMO'NIOUS. adj. [querimonia, Latin.] Querulous; complaining.

QUERIMO'NIOUSLY. adv. [from querimonious.] Querulously; with complaint.

To thee, dear Thom, myself addressing,

Most querimoniously confessing.

Denham.

QUERIMO'NIOUSNESS. n. f. [from querimonious.] Complaining temper.

QUERIST. n. f. [from quæro, Latin.] An inquirer; an asker of questions.

I shall propose some considerations to my gentle querist.

Spectator.

The juggling sea god, when by chance trepan'd

By some instructed querist sleeping on the strand,

Impatient of all answers, strait became

A stealing brook.

Swift.

QUERN. n. f. [cpenn, Sax.] A handmill.

Skim milk, and sometimes labour in the quern,

And bootless make the breathless huswife churn.

Shakspeare.

Some apple-colour'd corn

Ground in fair querns, and some did spindles turn.

Chapman.

QUE'RO. n. f. [corrupted from cuervo, Spanish.] A dress close to the body; a waistcoat.

I would fain see him walk in querpo, like a cased rabbit, without his holy fur upon his back.

Dryden.

QUERRY, for EQUERRY. n. f. [ecuyer, Fr.]

A groom belonging to a prince, or one conversant in the king's stables, and having the charge of his horses; also the stable of a prince.

Bailey.

QUERULOUS. adj. [querulus, Lat.] Mourning; whining; habitually complaining.

Although they were a people by nature hard-hearted, querulous, wrathful, and impatient of rest and quietness, yet was there nothing of force to work the subversion of their state, till the time before-mentioned was expired.

Hooker.

The pressures of war have cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the very accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if still complaining and crest-fallen.

Howel.

Though you give no countenance to the complaints of the querulous, yet curb the insolence of the injurious.

Locke.

QUERULOUSLY. adv. [from querulous.] In a complaining manner.

His wounded ears complaints eternal fill,

As uncoil'd hinges, querulously shrill.

Young.

QUERULOUSNESS. n. f. [from querulous.] Habit or quality of complaining mournfully.

QU'RY. n. f. [from quære, Latin.] A question; an inquiry to be resolved.

I shall conclude, with proposing only some queries, in order to a further search to be made by others.

Newton.

This shews the folly of this query, that might always be demanded, that would impiously and absurdly attempt to tie the arm of omnipotence from doing any thing at all, because it can never do its utmost.

Bentley.

To QU'RY. v. a. [from the noun.] To ask questions.

Three Cambridge sophs,

Each prompt to query, answer and debate.

Pope.

QUEST. n. f. [queste, French.]

1. Search; act of seeking.

None but such as this bold ape unblest,

Can ever thrive in that unlucky quest.

Spenser.

If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,

Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch?

Shakspeare.

QUE

Fair silver buskin'd nymphs,
I know this quest of yours and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant,
To the great mistress of your princely thrine. Milt.
An aged man in rural weeds,
Following, as seem'd, the quest of some stray ewe. Milton.

One for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
Th' unfounded deep, and the void immense
To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold Should be. Milton.
'T would be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day where Adam left it; and I the rather note this, because I see there are some so earnest in quest of it. Woodward.

There's not an African,
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues. Addison.
We see them active and vigilant in quest of delight. Speator.

2. [for inquest.] An empannelled jury.

What's my offence?
Where is the evidence, that doth accuse me?
What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge? Shakspeare.

3. Searchers. Collectively.

You have been hotly call'd for,
When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate sent above three several quests
To search you out. Shakspeare.

4. Inquiry; examination.

O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings. Shakspeare.

5. Request; desire; solicitation.

Gad not abroad at every quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion. Herbert.

To QUEST. v. n. [quêter, Fr. from the noun.] To go in search.

QUESTANT. n. s. [from quester, French.]
Seeker; endeavourer after.

See, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud. Shakspeare.

QUESTION. n. s. [question, Fr. quæstio,
Latin.]

1. Interrogatory; any thing inquired.

Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason for the entertainment of the time, that ye ask me questions, than that I ask you. Bacon.

2. Inquiry; disquisition.

It is to be put to question, whether it be lawful for christian princes to make an invasive war simply for the propagation of the faith. Bacon.

3. A dispute; a subject of debate.

There arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. John.

4. Affair to be examined.

In points of honour to be try'd,
Suppose the question not your own. Swift.
How easy is it for a man to fill a book with quotations, as you have done, that can be content with any thing, however foreign to the question? Waterland.

5. Doubt; controversy; dispute.

This is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character:
But out of question 'tis Maria's hand. Shakspeare.
'Tis time for him to shew himself, when his very being is called in question, and to come and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether he made it. Tillotson.

The doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other; not that it brings their truth at all in question. Locke.

Our own earth would be barren and desolate, without the benign influence of the solar rays, which without question is true of all the other planets. Bentley.

6. Judicial trial.

QUE

Whoever be found guilty, the communion book hath deserved least to be called in question for this fault. Hooker.

7. Examination by torture.

Such a presumption is only sufficient to put the person to the rack or question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe.

8. State of being the subject of present inquiry.

If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, their reply is childish and unorderly to say, that we demand the thing in question, and shew the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries would grant. Hooker.

If it would purchase six shillings and three-pence weighty money, he had proved the matter in question.
Locke.

Nor are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question.
Atterbury.

9. Endeavour; act of seeking. Not in use.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakspeare.

To QUESTION. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To inquire.

Suddenly out of this delightful dream
The man awoke, and would have question'd more;
But he would not endure the woful theme. Spenser.

He that questioneth much shall learn much, and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh. Bacon.

Unreasonable subtilty will still seem to be reasoning; and at least will question, when it cannot answer.
Holyday.

2. To debate by interrogatories.

I pray you think you question with a Jew;
You may as well use question with a wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb.
Shakspeare.

To QUESTION. v. a. [questionner, Fr.]

1. To examine one by questions.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case
yours;

Be now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much prophan'd;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your pow'r so silencing your son. Shakspeare.

But hark you, Kate,
I must not have you henceforth question me,
Whither I go. Shakspeare.

This construction is not so undubitable to be received as not at all to be questioned. Brown.

2. To doubt; to be uncertain of.

O impotent estate of human life!
Where fleeting joy does lasting doubt inspire,
And most we question what we most desire. Prior.

3. To have no confidence in; to mention as not to be trusted.

Be a design never so artificially laid, if it chances to be defeated by some cross accident, the man is then run down, his counsels derided, his prudence questioned, and his person despised. South.

QUESTIONABLE. adj. [from question.]

1. Doubtful; disputable.

Your accustomed clemency will take in good worth, the offer of these my simple labours, bestowed for the necessary justification of laws heretofore made questionable, because not perfectly understood. Hooker.

That persons drowned float, the ninth day when their gall breaketh, is a questionable determination, both in the time and cause. Brown.

It is questionable, whether the use of steel springs was known in those ancient times. Wilkins.

It is questionable, whether Galen ever saw the dissection of a human body. Baker.

2. Suspicious; liable to suspicion; liable to question.

Be thy advent wicked or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee. Shakspeare.

QUI

QUESTIONARY. adj. [from question.] Inquiring; asking questions.

I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes or no to questionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.

QUESTIONABLENESS. n. s. [from question.] The quality of being questionable.

QUESTIONER. n. s. [from question.] An inquirer.

QUESTIONLESS. adv. [from question.]
Certainly; without doubt; doubtless.

Questionless hence it comes that many were mistaken. Raleigh.

Questionless duty moves not so much upon command as promise; now that which proposes the greatest and most suitable rewards to obedience, and the greatest punishments to disobedience, doubtless is the most likely to enforce the one and prevent the other. South.

QUESTMAN. } n. s. [quest, man, and QUESTMONGER. } monger.] Starter of QUICKSIGHTEDNESS. n. f. [from quicksighted.] Sharpness of sight.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindness of a mole is an argument against the quicksightedness of an eagle. Locke.

QUICKSILVER. n. f. [quick and silver; argentum vivum, Latin.]

Quicksilver, called mercury by the chymists, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heaviest of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water: it is the least tenacious of all bodies, and every smaller drop may be again divided by the lightest touch into a multitude of others. The specific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heaviest of all fluids, it is also the coldest, and when heated the hottest; the ancients all esteemed quicksilver a poison, nor was it brought into internal use till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was first occasioned by shepherds, who ventured to give it their sheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was soon concluded, that men might take it safely: in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, swallowed it in vast quantities, in order to sell it privately, when they had voided it by stool: but the miners seldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally seized with paralytick disorders. Hill.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the best was wont to be made in Libia of of brimstone and quicksilver burnt. Peacham.

Pleasures are few; and fewer we enjoy; Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy; We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill, Still it eludes us, and it glitters still:

If seiz'd at last, compute your mighty gains, What is it, but rank poison in your veins? Young.

QUICKSILVERED. adj. [from quicksilver.]

Overlaid with quicksilver.

Metal is more difficult to polish than glass, and is afterwards very apt to be spoiled by tarnishing, and reflects not so much light as glass quicksilvered over does: I would propound to use instead of the metal a glass ground concave on the fore side, and as much convex on the backside, and quicksilvered over on the convex side. Newton.

QUIDAM. n. f. [Latin.] Somebody. Not used,

QUI

For envy of so many worthy quidams, which catch at the garland which to you alone is due, you will be persuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkness those so many excellent poems of yours, which lie hid, and bring them forth to eternal light. Spenser.

QUIDDANY. n. f. [cydonium, cydoniatum, Lat. quidden, German, a quince.] Marmalade; confection of quinces made with sugar.

Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
That rowl'd orbicular, and turn'd to stars. Milton.

They made fire, air, earth, and water, to be the four elements, of which all earthly things were compounded, and supposed the heavens to be a quintessence or fifth sort of body distinct from all these. Watts.

2. An extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a small quantity.

To me what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither. Shakspeare.

Who can in memory, or wit, or will,
Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?
What alchymist can draw, with all his skill,
The quintessence of these out of the mind? Davies.

For I am a very dead thing,
In whom love wrought new alchymy,
For by his art he did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations and lean emptiness. Donne.

Paracelsus, by the help of an intense cold, teaches to separate the quintessence of wine. Boyle.

Let there be light! said God; and forthwith light

Ethereal, first of things, quintessence pure;

1. A body of singers; a chorus.

The trees did bud and early blossoms bore,
And all the quire of birds did sweetly sing,
And told that garden's pleasures in their caroling. Spenser.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shakspeare.

At thy nativity a glorious quire
Of angels in the fields of Bethlehem sung
To shepherds watching at their folds by night,
And told them the Messiah now was born. Milton.

I may worship thee
For ay, with temples vow'd and virgin quires. Milton.

Begin the song, and strike the livelying lyre,
Lo how the years to come, a numerous and well fitted quire,
All hand in hand do decently advance,
And to my song with smooth and equal measures dance. Cowley.

As in beauty she surpass'd the quire,
So nobler than the rest was her attire. Dryden.

2. The part of the church where the service is sung.

I am all on fire,
Not all the buckets in a country quire
Shall quench my rage. Cleaveland.
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire,
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play. Dry.

The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires,
And wolves with howling fill the sacred quires. Pope.
3. [cabier, Fr.] A bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.

To QUIRE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sing in concert.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quivering to the young ey'd cherubims. Shakspeare.

My throat of war be turn'd
Which quird with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin's voice
That babies lulls asleep. Shakspeare.

QUIRISTER. n. s. [from quire.] Chorister; one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.

The coy quiristers, that lodge within,
And prodigal of harmony. Thomson.

QUIRK. n. s. [Of this word I can find no rational derivation.]

1. Quick stroke; sharp fit.

I've felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither on the start,
Can woman me unto 't. Shakspeare.

2. Smart taunt.

Some kind of men quarrel purposely on others to taste their valour; belike, this is a man of that quirk. Shakspeare.

I may chance to have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me. Shakspeare.

3. Slight conceit.

Conceits, puns, quirks or quibbles, jests and repartees may agreeably entertain, but have no place in the search after truth. Watts.

4. Flight of fancy. Not in use.

Most fortunately he hath achiev'd a maid,
That paragon description and wild fame,
One that excells the quirks of blazoning pens. Shakspeare.

5. Subtlety; nicety; artful distinction.

Let a lawyer tell them he has spied some defect in an entail; how solicitous are they to repair that error, and leave nothing to the mercy of a law quirk? Decay of Piety.

There are a thousand quirks to avoid the stroke of the law. L'Estrange.

6. Loose light tune.

Now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of prayer;
Light quirks of musick, broken and uneven. Pope.

To QUIT. v. a. part. pass. quit; pret. I quit or quitted. [quiter, Fr. quitare, Ital.
quitar, Spanish.]

1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.

We will be quit of thine oath, which thou hast made us to swear. Joshua.

By this act, old tyrant,
I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,
I was a stranger to thy blood, but now
Sure thou wilt love me for this horrid crime. Denb.
To John I ow'd great obligation;
But John, unhappily, thought fit
To publish it to all the nation;
Sure John and I are more than quit. Prior.

2. To set free.

Thou art quit from a thousand calamities; therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them, as is thy sadness when thou feelest any of them, do the same cure upon thy discontent. Taylor.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much: bent rather how I may be quit
Fairest and easiest of this cumb'rous charge. Milt.

To quit you of this fear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found so terrible in it? Wake.

3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.

Never worthy prince a day did quit
With greater hazard, and with more renown. Dan.

4. To clear himself of an affair: with the reciprocal pronoun.

Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroick, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd, hath left them years of mourning. Milton.

QUI

5. To repay; to requite.

He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was. Spens.
Enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act. Shakspeare.

6. To vacate obligations.

For our reward,
All our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments against us quitted.
Ben Jonson.

One step higher
Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude. Milton.

7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt; to be tantamount.

They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compassed with that wit and those senses which are our own.
Hooker.

Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air?
and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it? Saunders.
Still I shall hear, and never quit the score,
Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus' Thefeid o'er and o'er.
Dryden.

Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of vent, so as to quit the cost of the carriage. Temple.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To absolve; to acquit.

Nor further seek what their offences be,
Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free. Fairfax.

9. To pay.

Far other plaints, tears, and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require,
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that judge that quits each soul his hire.
Fairfax.

10. To abandon; to forsake.

Their father,
Then old and fond of issue, took such sorrow,
That he quit being. Shakspeare.
Honours are promis'd
To all will quit em; and rewards propos'd
Even to slaves that can detect their courses. B. Jon.
Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding, such a superficial way of examining is to quit truth for appearance, only to serve our vanity.
Locke.

11. To resign; to give up.

The prince, renown'd in bounty as in arms,
With pity saw the ill-conceal'd distress,
Quitted his title to Campaspe's charms,
And gave the fair one to the friend's embrace. Prior.

QUITCHGRASS. n. f. [cpice, Sax. gramen caninum, Lat.] Dog-grass.

They are the best corn to grow on grounds subject to quitchgrass or other weeds. Mortimer.

QUITE. adv. [This is derived, by the etymologists, from quittè, discharged, free, French, which, however at first appearance unlikely, is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was in this combination, quite and clean; that is, with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly; totally; thoroughly.

Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary. Hooker.
He hath sold us, and quite devoured our money.
Genesis.
If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand. Locke.
The same actions may be aimed at different ends,
and arise from quite contrary principles. Spektor.

QUITRENT. n. f. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.

Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quittrent, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas. Temple.

QUI

My old master, a little before his death, wished him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had left as quittrents upon the estate. Spektor.

QUITS. interj. [from quit] An exclamation used when any thing is repayed and the parties become even.

QUITTANCE. n. f. [quittance, French.]

1. Discharge from a debt or obligation;
an acquittance.
Now I am rememb'ed, he scorn'd at me!
But that's all one; omittance is no quittance.
Shakspeare.

2. Recompence; return; repayment.

Miner eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rend'ring faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Henry Monmouth. Shakspeare.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no meed but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance. Shakspeare.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit. Shakspeare.

TO QUITTANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To repay; to recompence. Not used.
Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit. Shakspeare.

QUITTER. n. f.

1. A deliverer. Ainsworth.

2. Scoria of tin. Ainsworth.

QUITTERBONE. n. f. A hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter, and grows most commonly on the inside of the foot.

QUIVER. n. f. [This word seems to be corrupted from couvrir, Fr. to cover.]

A case or sheath for arrows.
As Dianne hunted on a day,
She chanc'd to come where Cupid lay,
His quiver by his head,
One of his shafts she stole away,
And one of hers did close convey
Into the other's stead;
With that love wounded my love's heart,
But Dianne boasts with cupid's dart. Spenser.

Those works, with ease as much he did,
As you would ope and shut your quiver-lid. Chapm.
Diana's nymphs would be arrayed in white, their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides. Peacocks.

Her sounding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd. Dryden.

QUIVER. adj. Nimble; active. Not in use.

There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about. Shakspeare.

TO QUIVER. v. n.

1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.

The birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind.
Shakspeare.

O'er the pommel cast the knight,
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.
With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground.
Addison.

Eurydice with quiver'ring voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Eurydice return'd. Gay.
Dancing sun-beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quiver'ring shade. Pope.
The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze. Pope.

2. To shiver; to shudder.

Zelmae would have put to her helping hand, but she was taken with such a quivering, that she thought it more wisdom to lean herself to a tree and look on.
Sidney.

QUIVERED. adj. [from quiver.]

1. Furnished with a quiver.

QUO

'Tis chastity:

She that has that, is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and perilous sandy wilds. Milton.

2. Sheathed as in a quiver.

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.
To QUOB. v. n. [A low word.] To move as the embryo does in the womb; to move as the heart does when throbbing.

QUODLIBET. n. f. [Lat.] A nice point; a subtilty.

He who reading on the heart,
When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and heat, Swore he had never felt it beat. Prior.

QUODLIBETARIAN. n. f. [quodlibet, Lat.]

One who talks or disputes on any subject. Diels.

QUODLIBETICAL. adj. [quodlibet, Lat.]

columns at each end. Mortimer.

2. An instrument for raising warlike engines.

QUOIT. n. f. [coete, Dutch.]

1. Something thrown to a great distance to a certain point.

He plays at quoits well. Shakspeare.
When he plaid at quoits, he was allowed his breeches and stockings. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. The discus of the ancients is sometimes called in English quoit, but improperly;
the game of quoits is a game of skill; the discus was only a trial of strength, as among us to throw the hammer.

To QUOIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To throw quoits; to play at quoits. Dryden uses it to throw the discus. See the noun.

Noble youths for mastership should strive,
To quoit, to run, and steeds and chariots drive.
Dryden.

To QUOIT. v. a. To throw.

Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat shilling. Shakspeare.

QUONDAM. [Latin.] Having been formerly. A ludicrous word.

This is the quondam king, let's seize upon him—
Shakspeare.
What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

QUOTIDIAN. n. s. [febris quotidiana, Lat.]

A quotidian fever; a fever which returns every day.

If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love. Shakspeare.

QUOTIENT. n. s. [quotient, Fr. quoties, Lat.] In arithmetick, is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers, the one by the other.

Cocker.

To make all the steps belonging to the same pair of stairs of an equal height, they consider the height of the room in feet and inches, and multiply the feet by twelve, whose product, with the number of odd inches, gives the sum of the whole height in inches, which sum they divide by the number of steps they intend to have in that height, and the quotient shall be the number of inches and parts that each step shall be high. Moxon.

R

R A B

R, Is called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as, red, rose, more, muriatick: in words derived from the Greek, it is followed by an b, rhapsody: r is never mute, unless the second r may be accounted mute, where two rr are used; as myrrh.

TO RA'BATE. v. n. [rabattre, Fr.] In falconry, to recover a hawk to the fist again. Ainsworth.

RA'BATO. n. s. A neckband; a ruff.

Pok'd her rabatos, and survey'd her steel. Old Comedy.

TO RA'BBET. v. a. [rabatre, raboter, Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.

The rabbit plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may join into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabbeting. Moxon.

The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbeted on its outside about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbets are grooved square. Moxon.

RA'BBET. n. s. [from the verb.] A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.

Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbets of the door within the rabbets of the door-post. Moxon.

R A B

RA'BBI. } n. s. A doctor among the RA'BBIN. } Jews.

Be not ye called rabbi; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Matthew.

The Hebrew rabbins say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the teeth, the tongue, the palate and throat. Camden's Remains.

RA'BBIT. n. s. [robbe, robbekin, Dut.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.

I knew a wench married; as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit. Shakspeare.

A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be silent for fear of scaring of them; but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecce multi cuniculi; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, Who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin? Bacon.

RA'BBLE. n. s. [rabula, Latin; rabulari, low Latin.] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.

Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to mercy, Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths? Shaksp.

Go bring the rabble here to this place. Shaksp.
Of these his several ravishments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.

The better sort abhors scurrility, And often censures what the rabble like. Roscommon.

That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so rings of, are not the wisest men in the world. South.

To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabble scene, because the mob are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same character of baseness and cowardice. Dryden.

R A C

In change of government,
The rabble rule their great oppressors fate,
Do sov'reign justice and revenge the state. Dryden.

His enemies have been only able to make ill impressions upon the low and ignorant rabble, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment. Addison.

RA'BBLEMENT. n. s. [from rabble.] Crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people. Not in use.

A rude rabblement,
Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide,
But got his ready steed, and fast away 'gan ride. Spenser.

The rabblement houted, clapp'd their chopt hands, and uttered a deal of stinking breath. Shakspeare.

There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and other of the same rabblement. Camden.

RA'BID. adj. [rabidus, Lat.] Fierce; furious; mad.

RA'BINET. n. s. A kind of smaller ordinance. Ainsworth.

RACE. n. s. [race, Fr. from radice, Lat.]

1. A family ascending.
2. Family descending.

He in a moment will create Another world; out of man, a race
Of men innumerable, there to dwell. Milton.

Male he created thee, but thy consort
Female for race. Milton.

High as the mother of the gods in place,
And proud like her of an immortal race. Dryden.

Hence the long race of Alban fathers come. Dryden.

3. A generation; a collective family.

A race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds. Shakspeare.

4. A particular breed.

The race of mules, fit for the plough is bred.

Chapman.

Instead

Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room.

Milton.

In the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance.

Locke

If they are all debas'd and willing slaves,
The young but breathing to grow grey in bondage,
And the old sinking to ignoble graves,
Of such a race no matter who is king.

Murphy.

5. RACE of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Spanish.] A root or sprig of ginger.

6. A particular strength or taste of wine, applied by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect.

Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than of others; but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the seat, or some great race of fancy or judgment in contrivance.

Temple.

7. [ras, Islandick.] Contest in running.

To describe races and games

Or tilting furniture.

Milton.

Stand forth, ye champions who the gauntlet wield,

Or you the swiftest racers of the field;

Stand forth, ye wrestlers who these pastimes grace,

I wield the gauntlet, and I run the race.

Pope.

8. Course on the feet.

The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts.

Bacon.

9. Progress; course.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples have taught them, never stopt his race till it came to a headlong overthrow.

Sidney.

My race of glory run, and race of shame.

Milt.

The great light of day yet wants to run

Much of his race though steep.

Milton.

He safe return'd, the race of glory past,

New to his friends embrace.

10. Train; process.

An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant;
shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence?

Bacon.

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Ubin, which he re-obtained.

RACEHORSE. n. f. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.

The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a race-horse, which runs the faster the less weight it carries.

Addison.

RACEMATION. n. f. [racemus, Latin.]
Cluster, like that of grapes.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole race- mation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after.

Brown.

RACEMI'FEROUS. adj. [racemus and fero,
Lat.] Bearing clusters.

RA' CER. n. f. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in speed.

His stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high

As any other Pegasus can fly;

So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,

Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood.

Darset.

A poet's form the plac'd before their eyes,

And bad the nimblest racer seize the prize.

Pope.

RA' CINESS. n. f. [from racy.] The quality of being racy.

RACK. n. f. [racke, Dut. from racken, to stretch.]

1. An engine to torture.

Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him
That would, upon the rack of this rough world, Stretch him out longer.

Shakspeare.

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress.

Taylor.

Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire,
And in the tortures of the rack expire.

Addison.

2. Torture; extreme pain.

A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject.

Temple.

A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an instance of aversion or indifference.

Addison.

3. Any instrument by which extension is performed.

These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used to others.

Wilkins.

4. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball.
It is commonly spoken and written rack.

The sisters turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel.

Dryden.

5. [racke, Dutch, a track.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.

That, which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water.

Shakspeare.

The great globe itself,

Yea, all, which it inherit, shall dissolve;

And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,

Leave not a rack behind.

Shakspeare.

We often see against some storm,

A silence in the heavens, the rack stand still,

The bold winds speechless, and the orb below

As hush as death.

Shakspeare.

The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise.

Bacon.

As win'try winds contending in the sky,

With equal force of lungs their titles try;

They rage, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n

Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n.

Dryd.

6. [hnacca, the occiput, Saxon; racca, Islandick, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.

7. A grate; the grate on which bacon is laid.

8. A wooden grate in which hay is placed for cattle.

Their bulls they send to pastures far,

Or hills, or feed them at full racks within.

May.

The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down.

Mortimer.

He bid the nimble hours
Bring forth the steeds; the nimble hours obey:

From their full racks the gen'rous steeds retire.

Add.

9. Arrack; a spirituous liquor. See AR-RACK.

TO RACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To stream as clouds before the wind.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,

Not separated with the racking clouds,

But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.

Shakspeare.

TO RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To torment by the rack.

Unhappy most like tortured me,

Their joints new set to be new rack'd again.

Cowley.

Hold, O dreadful sir,

You will not rack an innocent old man.

Dry. and Lee.

2. To torment; to harass.

Th' apostate angel, though in pain,

Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.

Milt.

3. To harass by exaction.

The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants, exacting of them, besides his covenants, what he pleaseth.

Spenser.

The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags

Are lank and lean with thy extortions.

Shakspeare.

He took possession of his just estate,

Nor rack'd his tenants with increase of rent.

Dryd.

4. To screw; to force to performance.

They racking and stretching scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn into sundry inconveniences.

Hooker.

The wisest among the heathens rack'd their wits, and cast about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage.

Tillotson.

It was worth the while for the adversary to rack invention, and to call in all the succours of learning and critical skill to assail them, if possible, and to wrest them out of our hands.

Waterland.

5. To stretch; to extend.

Nor have I money nor commodity

To raise a present sum;

Try what my credit can in Venice do,

That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost.

Shakspeare.

6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees.

I know not whence this word is derived in this sense; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinse: this is perhaps of the same race.

It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify much sooner.

Bacon.

Some roll their cask about the cellar to mix it with the lees, and, after a few days resettlement, rack it off.

Mortimer.

RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] Rent raised to the uttermost.

Have poor families been ruined by rack-rents, paid for the lands of the church?

Swift.

RACK-RENTER. n. f. [rack and renter.]

One who pays the uttermost rent.

Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the publick tax takes away one hundred; yet

this influences not the yearly rent of the land;

which the rack-renter or undertenant pays.

Locke.

RA'CKET. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation;

Casaubon derives it, after his custom, from εαχία, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]

1. An irregular clattering noise.

That the tennis court keeper knows better than I,

it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there.

Shakspeare.

2. A confused talk. In burlesque language.

Ambition hath removed her lodging, and lives

the next door to faction, where they keep such a racket, that the whole parish is disturbed and every night in an uproar.

Swift.

3. [raquette, Fr.] The instrument with which players at tennis strike the ball.

Whence perhaps all the other senses.

When we have matcht our rackets to these balls,

We will in France play a set,

Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.

Shakspeare.

The body, into which impression is made, either can yield backward or it cannot: if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion;

as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it.

Digby on the Soul.

He talks much of the motives to do and forbear,

how they determine a reasonable man, as if he were no more than a tennis-ball, to be tossed to and fro

by the rackets of the second causes.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

RA'CKING. n. f.

Racking pace of a horse is the same as an amble, only that it is a swifter time and a shorter tread; and though it does not rid so much ground, yet it is something easier.

Farrier's Dict.

RA'CKOON. n. f.

The rackoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep fur: it sleeps in the day time in a hollow tree, and goes out at nights, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea side, where it is hunted by dogs.

Bailey.

RA'CY. adj. [perhaps from rayz, Spanish, a root] Strong; flavoured; tasting of the soil.

Rich racy verses in which we

The soil, from which they come, taste, smell, and see.

Cowley.

From his brain that Helicon distil,

Whole racy liquor did his offspring fill.

Denham.

The cyder at first is very luscious, but if ground more early, it is more racy.

Mortimer.

The hospitable sage, in sign

Of social welcome, mix'd the racy wine,

Late from the mellowing cask restor'd to light,

By ten long years refin'd, and rosy bright.

Pope.

RAD. The old pret. of read.

Spenser.

RAD, RED, and ROD, differing only in dialect, signify counsel; as Conrad, powerful or skilful in counsel; Ethelred, a noble counsellor; Rodbert, eminent for counsel: Eubulus and Thrasylbulus have almost the same sense. Gibson.

R A D

RA'DDOCK, or ruddock. n. f. A bird; the redbreast.

The raddock would,
With charitable bill, bring thee all this. Shaksp.
RA'DIANCE. n. f. [radiare, Latin.]
RA'DIANCY. n. f. Sparkling lustre; glitter.

By the sacred radiance of the sun,
By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shaksp.
Whether there be not too high an apprehension above its natural radiancy, is not without just doubt; however it be granted a very splendid gem, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The Son
Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine. Milton.
A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiancy.
Burnet.

RA'DIANT. adj. [radians, Lat.] Shining; brightly sparkling; emitting rays.

There was a sun of gold radiant upon the top, and before, a small cherub of gold with wings displayed.
Bacon.

Mark what radiant state she spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
This, this is she alone. Milton's Arcades.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.
I see the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glitt'ring arms and beamy pride,
Go forth to succour truth below. Milton.

To RA'DIATE. v. n. [radio, Latin.] To emit rays; to shine; to sparkle.

Though with wit and parts their possessors could never engage God to send forth his light and his truth: yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleased to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect those scattered divine beams, and kindling with them the topicks proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.
Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.

RA'DIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.

The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Ausonius. Addison.

RADIA'TION. n. f. [radiatio, Lat. radia- tion, Fr.]

1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.
We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.

Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you. Donne.

2. Emission from a centre every way.
Sound paralleleth in many things with the light,
and radiation of things visible. Bacon.

RA'DICAL. adj. [radical, Fr. from radix,
Latin.]

1. Primitive; original.
The differences, which are secondary, and proceed from these radical differences, are, plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.
Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by religion.
Bentley.

2. Implanted by nature.
The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carrieth it for company. Bacon.

VOL. II.

R A F

If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed.
Wilkins.

The sun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Arbutnot.

3. Serving to origination.
RADICALITY. n. f. [from radical.] Origination.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms; thus, in the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the feminality of darnel.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RA'DICALLY. adj. [from radical.] Original y; primitively.

It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined unto one part. Brown.

These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts, and origins of light
Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

RA'DICALNESS. n. f. [from radical.] The state of being radical.

To RA'DICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.

Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable consistence in the soul. Hammond.

Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radicated beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown.

If the object stays not on the sense, it makes not impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object: in which radicated knowledge, if the memory consist, there would be no need of reserving those atoms in the brain. Glanville.

RADICA'TION. n. f. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of taking root and fixing deep.

They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radication of those habits; and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls. Hammond.

RA'DICLE. n. f. [radicule, Fr. from radix, Lat.] That part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RA'DISH. n. f. [rædic, Saxon; radis, rai- fort, Fr. raphanus, Lat.] A root commonly eaten raw. Miller.

RA'DIUS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. The semidiameter of a circle.
2. A bone of the fore arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.

To RAFF. v. a. To sweep; to huddle;
to take hastily without distinction.

Their causes and effects I thus raff up together.
Carew.

To RA'FFLE. v. n. [raffler, to snatch, Fr.]
To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.

Letters from Hampstead give me an account, there is a late institution there, under the name of a raffing shop. Tatler.

RA'FFLE. n. f. [raffe, Fr. from the verb.]
A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.

The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle.
Arbutnot on Coins.

RAFT. n. f. [probably from ratis, Lat.] A frame or float made by laying pieces of timber cross each other.

R A G

Where is that son
That floated with thee on the fatal raft? Shaksp.
Fell the timber of yon lofty grove,
And form a raft, and build the rising ship. Pope.
RAFT. part. pass. of reave or raff. Spenser.
Torn; rent.

RA'FTER. n. f. [næften, Saxon; rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says Junius, from roof tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.

The rafters of my body, bone,
Being still with you, the muscle, sinew, and vein,
Which tile this house, will come again. Donne.

Shepherd,
I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls. Milton.
On them the Trojans cast Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.

By Donaus, king of Egypt, when he fled from his brother Ramefes, the use of shipping was first brought among the Grecians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow seas, but on beams or rafters tied to one another. Heylin.

From the East, a Belgian wind
His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;
The flames impell'd. Dryden.

The roof began to mount aloft,
Aloft rose every beam and rafter,
The heavy wall climb'd slowly after. Swift.

RA'FTERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.

No raft'ed roofs with dance and tabor sound,
No noon-tide bell invites the country round. Pope.

RAG. n. f. [hjacode, torn, Sax. gæx.]
1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.

Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers tost,
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.
Rags are a great improvement of chalky lands.
Mortimer.

2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out clothes: proverbially, mean dress.

Fathers that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear bags,
Shall see their children kind. Shakspere.

They took from me
Both coate and cloake, and all things that might be Grace in my habit; and in place, put on These tatter'd rags. Chapman.

Worn like a cloth,
Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.
Content with poverty, my soul I arm;
And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm.
Dryden.

3. A fragment of dress.
He had first matter seen undrest;
He took her naked all alone,
Before one rag of form was on. Hudibras.

RAGAMUFFIN. n. f. [from rag and I know not what else.] A paltry mean fellow.

I have led my ragamuffins where they were pepper'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakspere.

Shall we brook that paltry ass
And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,
With that more paltry ragamuffin,
Ralpho, vapouring and huffing? Hudibras.

Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, she broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy, and then set it on fire. Swift.

RAGE. n. f. [rage, French.]

1. Violent anger; vehement fury.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of uskann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Shakspere.

Desire not T' allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasons. Shakspere.

3 G

Argument more heroic than the rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia disposs'd. Milton.
Torment and loud lament and furious rage.

2. Vehemence or exacerbation of any thing painful.

The party hurt, who hath been in great rage of pain, till the weapon was re-anointed. Bacon.
The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress. Pope.

3. Enthusiasm; rapture.

Who brought green poetry to her perfect age,
And made that art which was a rage. Cowley.

4. Eagerness; vehemence of mind: as, a rage of money getting.

You purchase pain with all that joy can give,
And die of nothing but a rage to live. Pope.

Then may his soul its free-born rage enjoy,
Give deed to will, and ev'ry pow'r employ. Harte.

To RAGE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be in fury; to be heated with excessive anger.

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whoever is deceived thereby, is not wise. Proverbs.
Why do the heathen rage? Psalms.

At this he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff. Milton.

2. To ravage; to exercise fury.

Heart-rending news,
That death should license have to rage among The fair, the wise, the virtuous. Waller.

3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another, seem like torches, and run like the lightnings. Nabum.

The madding wheels of brazen chariots rag'd.
Milton.

After these waters had raged on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Burnet.

RA'GEFUL, adj. [rage and full.] Furious; violent.

This courtesy was worse than a bastinado to Zelmane; so that again with rageful eyes she bad him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney.

A popular orator may represent vices in so formidable appearances, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rageful person shall find a calm. Hammond.

RA'GGED, adj. [from rag.]

1. Rent into tatters.

How like a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind;
How like the prodigal doth she return
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind.
Shakspeare.

As I go in this ragged tattered coat, I am hunted away from the old woman's door by every barking cur. Arbutnot.

2. Uneven; consisting of parts almost dis-united.

The earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen pourtrayed in their church steeple. Carew.

That some whirlwind bear
Unto a ragged, fearful, hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea. Shakspeare.
The moon appears, when looked upon with a good glass, rude and ragged. Burnet.

3. Dressed in tatters.

Since noble arts in Rome have no support,
And ragged virtue not a friend at court. Dryden.

4. Rugged; not smooth.

The wolf would barter away a ragged coat and a raw-boned carcase, for a smooth fat one. L'Estran.
What shepherd owns those ragged sheep? Dryden.

RA'GGEDNESS, n. s. [from ragged.] State of being dressed in tatters.

Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you?
Shakspeare.

RA'GINGLY, adv. [from raging.] With vehement fury.

RA'GMAN, n. s. [rag and man.] One who deals in rags.

RAGOUT, n. s. [Fr.] Meat stewed and highly seasoned.

To the stage permit
Ragouts for Tereus or Thyestes drest,
'Tis task enough for thee to expose a Roman feast.
Dryden.

No fish they reckon comparable to a ragout of snails.
Addison.

When art and nature join, th' effect will be
Some nice ragout, or charming fricasy.
King's Cookery.

RA'ESTONE, n. s. [rag and stone.]

1. A stone so named from its breaking in a ragged, uncertain, irregular manner.

Woodward on Fossils.

2. The stone with which they smooth the edge of a tool new ground and left ragged.

RA'GWORT, n. s. [rag and wort.] A plant.

Miller.

RAIL, n. s. [riegel, German.]

1. A cross beam fixed at the ends in two upright posts.

If you make another square, and also a tennant on each untenanted end of the stiles, and another mortise on the top and bottom rails, you may put them together. Moxon.

2. A series of posts connected with beams, by which any thing is enclosed: a pale is a series of small upright posts rising above the cross beam, by which they are connected: a rail is a series of cross beams supported with posts, which do not rise much above it.

A man upon a high place without rails, is ready to fall. Bacon.

A large square table for the commissioners, one side being sufficient for those of either party, and a rail for others which went round. Clarendon.

3. A kind of bird.

Of wild birds Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge and pheasant. Carew.

4. [nægle, Sax.] A woman's upper garment. This is preserved only in the word nightrail.

To RAIL, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enclose with rails.

The hand is square, with four rounds at the corners; this should first have been planched over,
and railed about with ballisters. Carew.

As the churchyard ought to be divided from other profane places, so it ought to be fenced in and railed. Ayliffe.

Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit-cloth, and railed in the communion-table. Spekator.

2. To range in a line.

They were brought to London all railed in ropes, like a team of horses in a cart, and were executed
some at London, and the rest at divers places.
Bacon.

To RAIL, v. n. [railler, Fr. rallen, Dut.]

To use insolent and reproachful language;
to speak to, or to mention in opprobrious terms; formerly with on, now commonly with at.

Your husband is in his old luns again; he so rails against all married mankind, curses all Eve's daughters. Shakspeare.

What a monstrous fellow art thou? thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee. Shakspeare.

Till thou canst rail the seals from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud.
Shakspeare.

He tript me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shakspeare.

Angels bring not railling accusation against them.
2 Peter.

The plain the forests doth disdain:
The forests rail upon the plain. Drayton.
If any is angry, and rails at it, he may securely.
Locke.

Thou art my blood, where Jonson has no part;
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.
Lesbia for ever on me rails,
To talk of me she never fails. Swift.

RAI'LER, n. s. [from rail.] One who insults or defames by opprobrious language.

If I build my felicity upon my reputation, I am as happy as long as the railer will give me leave.
South's Sermons.

Let no presuming impious railer tax Creative wisdom. Thomson.

RAI'LLERY, n. s. [raillerie, Fr.] Slight satire; satirical merriment.

Let raillery be without malice or heat. Ben Jon.
A quotation out of Hudibras shall make them treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next: raillery of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble.
Addison.

Studies employed on low objects; the very naming of them is sufficient to turn them into raillery.
Addison.

To these we are solicited by the arguments of the subtile, and the railleries of the prophane. Rogers.

RAI'MENT, n. s. [for arraiment, from array.] Vesture; vestment; dress; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.

His raiments, though mean, received handsomeness
by the grace of the wearer. Sidney.

O Protheus, let this habit make the blush!
Be thou asham'd, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment. Shakspeare.

Living, both food and raiment she supplies. Dry.

You are to consider them as the servants and instruments of action, and so give them food, and rest, and raiment, that they may be strong and healthful to do the duties of a charitable, useful, pious life. Law.

To RAIN, v. n. [nenian, Sax. regen, Dutch.]

1. To fall in drops from the clouds.

Like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
That all at once it falls. Dryden.
The wind is south-west, and the weather low-ring, and like to rain. Locke.

2. To fall as rain.

The eye marvelleth at the whiteness thereof, and the heart is astonished at the raining of it. Ecclesi.
They sat them down to weep; nor only tears
Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds rose within.
Milton.

3. It RAINS. The water falls from the clouds.

That which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakspeare.

To RAIN, v. a. To pour down as rain.

It rain'd down fortune, show'ring on your head.
Shakspeare.

Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakspeare.

Israel here had famish'd, had not God
Rain'd from heav'n manna. Milton.

RAIN, n. s. [nen, Saxon.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.

When shall we three meet again,
In thunder, lightning, or in rain? Shakspeare.
With strange rains, hails, and showers were they persecuted. Wisdom.

The lost clouds pour
Into the sea an useless show'r,
And the vex'd sailors curse the rain,
For which poor farmers pray'd in vain. Waller.

Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till encountering the cold, it be condensed into clouds, and descends in drops. Ray.

RAI'NBOW. n. f. [rain and bow.] The iris; the semicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.

Casting of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to see the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.

To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shakspeare.

The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large wings disspread in the form of a semicircle, the feathers of sundry colours. Peacham.

They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it. Brown.

This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sun-shine, and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break aloft, and scatter into drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain. Newton.

The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze, And forms a rainbow of alternate rays. Pope.

Gay rainbow filks her mellow charms in fold, And nought of Lyce but herself is old. Young.

RAI'NDEER. n. f. [hnanar, Sax. rangifer, Lat.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

RAI'NINESS. n. f. [from rainy.] The state of being showery.

RAIN-WATER. n. f. [rain and water.] Water not taken from springs, but falling from the clouds.

Court holy water in a dry house, is better than the rain-water out o' doors. Shakspeare.

We took distilled rain-water. Boyle.

Rain-water is to be preferred before spring-water. Mortimer.

RAI'NY. adj. [from rain.] Showery; wet.

most indulgent towards their children. Bacon.

He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confess that he hath less virtue. Taylor.

Raiser of human kind! by nature cast,
Naked and helpless. Thomson.

RAI'SIN. n. f. [racemus, Lat. raisin, Fr.]

Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried: grapes of every kind, preserved in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and pleasanter than those dried in ovens; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars. Hill's Mat. Med.

Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which being betimes distilled, affords an oil and spirit much like the raisins themselves. Boyle.

RAKE. n. f. [rastrum, Lat. paxe, Saxon; racche, Dutch.]

1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.

At midsummer down with the brembles and brakes,

And after abroad with thy forkes and thy rakes. Tusser.

O that thy bounteous deity wou'd please

To guide my rake upon the chinking sound
Of some vast treasure hidden under ground. Dryden.

He examines his face in the stream, combs his rueful locks with a rake. Garth.

2. [racaille, Fr. the low rabble; or rekel,
Dut. a worthless cur dog.] A loose, disorderly, vicious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow; a man addicted to pleasure.

The next came with her son, who was the greatest rake in the place, but so much the mother's darling, that she left her husband for the sake of this graceless youth. Addison.

Rakes hate sober grave gentlewomen. Arbutnot.

Men, some to bus'ness, some to pleasure take,
But ev'ry woman is at heart a rake. Pope.

The fire saw smiling his own virtues wake;
The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake. Pope.

To dance at publick places, that fops and rakes might admire the fineness of her shape, and the beauty of her motions. Law.

TO RAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gather with a rake.

Mow barlie, and rake it, and set it on cocks. Tuff.

Harrows iron teeth shall every where Rake helmets up. May's Virgil's Georgicks.

If it be such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to rake it out of dunghills; and accordingly the apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract. South.

2. To clear with a rake.

As they rake the green appearing ground,
The russet hay-cock rises. Thomson.

3. To draw together by violence.

An eager desire to rake together whatsoever might prejudice or any way hinder the credit of apocryphal books, hath caused the collectors pen so to run as it were on wheels, that the mind, which should guide it, had no leisure to think. Hooker.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated!
How, i' th' name of thrift,

Does he rake this together? Shakspeare.

A sport more formidable
Had rak'd together village rabble. Hudibras.

Ill-gotten goods are squandered away with as little conscience as they were raked together. L'Estrange.

4. To scour; to search with eager and vehement diligence.

The statesman rakes the town to find a plot. Swift.

5. To heap together and cover. To rake
the fire is still used.

Here i' th' sanas
Thee I'll rake up, the post unsanctified
Of murth'rous lechers. Shakspeare.

The blazing wood may to the eye seem great,
But 'tis the fire rak'd up that has the heat,

And keeps it long. Snodling.

To RAKE. v. n.

1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisomeness.

If you hide the crown
Ev'n in your hearts, there will he rake for it.
Shakspeare.
It is as offensive, as to rake into a dunghill.
South.

Another finds the way to dye in grain;
Or for the golden ore in rivers rakes,
Then melts the mass.
Dryden.
One is for raking in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be revived, but when sound or significance is wanting.
Dryden.

After having made essays into it, as they do for coal in England, they rake into the most promising parts.
Addison.

2. To pass with violence.

When Pas hand reached him to take,
The fox on knees and elbows tumbled down:
Pas could not stay, but over him did rake,
And crown'd the earth with his first touching crown.
Sidney.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our sterns they fend.
Dryden.

RA'KER. n. f. [from rake.] One that rakes.

RA'KEHELL. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: as it is now written, it is apparently derived from rake and hell, and may aptly represent a wretch whose life is passed in places of lewdness and wickedness: Skinner derives it from racaille, French, the rabble; Junius, from rekel, Dutch, a mongrel dog.] A wild, worthless, dissolute, debauched, forry fellow.

Out of the fric of these rakehell horse-boys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern supplied.
Spenser.

The king, when he heard of Perkins's siege of Exeter, said in sport, that the king of rakebells was landed in the West, and that he hoped now to see him.
Bacon.

A rakehell of the town, whose character is set off with excessive prodigality, prophaneness, intemperance, and lust, is rewarded with a lady of great fortune to repair his own, which his vices had almost ruined.
Swift.

RA'KEHELLY. adj. [from rakehell.] Wild;
dissolute.

I scorn the rakebilly rout of our ragged rhimers, which without learning boast, without judgment
jangle, and without reason rage and foam.
Spenser.
No breaking of windows or glasses for spight,
And spoiling the goods for a rakebilly prank.
Ben Jonson.

RA'KISH. adj. [from rake.] Loose; lewd;
dissolute.

There seldom can be peculiarity in the love of a rakish heart.
Clarissa.

To RA'LLY. v. a. [rallier, French.]

1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.

With rallied arms to try what may be yet
Regain'd in heav'n.
Milton.

Publick arguing serves to wet the wits of here-ticks, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their sophistry to fortify them with fallacy.
Decay of Piety.

Luther deters men from solitariness; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without.
Atterbury.

2. [railler, French.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.

Honeycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies me upon a country life.
SpeStator.

If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into the fire.
Addison.

R A M

Strephon had long confest'd his am'rous pain,
Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain.
Gay.

To RA'LLY. v. n.

1. To come together in a hurry.

If God should shew this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might say, that innumerable parts of matter chanced just then to rally together, and to form themselves into this new world.
Tillotson.

2. To come again into order.

The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;
With fury charge us.
Dryden.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.

RAM. n. f. [nam, Saxon; ram, Dutch.]

1. A male sheep; in some provinces, a tup.

The ewes, being rank, turned to the rams.
Shakspeare.

An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram tender.
Shakspeare.

Much like a well grown bel-weather or feltred
ram he shews.
Chapman.

You may draw the bones of a ram's head hung with strings of beads and ribbands.
Peacbam.

A ram their off'ring, and a ram their meat.
Dryden.

2. Aries, the vernal sign.

The ram having pass'd the sea, serenely shines,
And leads the year.
Creech.

3. An instrument with an iron head to batter walls.

Let not the piece of virtue,
Which is set as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter
The fortrefs of it.
Shakspeare.

Judas calling upon the Lord, who without any rams or engines of war did cast down Jericho, gave a fierce assault against the walls.
2 Maccabees.

To RAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive with violence, as with a battering ram.

Ram thou thy faithful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren.
Shakspeare.

Having no artillery nor engines, and finding that he could do no good by ramming with logs of timber, he set one of the gates on fire.
Bacon.

The charge with bullet, or paper wet and hard stopped, or with powder alone rammed in hard, maketh no great difference in the loudness of the report.
Bacon.

Here many poor people roll in vast balls of snow, which they ram together, and cover from the sunshine.
Addison.

2. To fill with any thing driven hard together.

As when that devilish iron engine wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ramm'd with bullet round ordain'd to kill.
Spenser.

He that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world.
Shakspeare.

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth, but the citizens made a countermine.
Hayward.

This into hollow engines, long and round,
Thick ramm'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire
Dilated and infuriate, shall send forth
Such implements of mischief, as shall dash
To pieces.
Milton.

A ditch drawn between two parallel furrows, was filled with some sound materials, and rammed to make the foundation solid.
Arbutnot.

rove loosely in lust; ramb, Swedish, to rove.] To rove loosely and irregularly;
to wander.

Shame contracts the spirits, fixes the ramblings of fancy, and gathers the man into himself.
South.

He that is at liberty to ramble in perfect darkness, what is his liberty better than if driven up and down
as a bubble by the wind?
Locke.

R A M

Chapman has taken advantage of an immeasurable length of verse, notwithstanding which, there is scarce any paraphrase so loose and rambling as his.
Pope.

Never ask leave to go abroad, for you will be thought an idle rambling fellow.
Swift.

O'er his ample sides the rambling sprays
Luxuriant shoot.
Thomson.

RA'MBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Wandering; irregular excursion.

This conceit puts us upon the ramble up and down for relief, till very weariness brings us at last to ourselves.
L'Estrange.

Coming home after a short Christmas ramble, I found a letter upon my table.
Swift.

She quits the narrow path of sense
For a dear ramble through impertinence.
Swift.

act of branching out.

By continuation of prophane histories or other monuments kept together, the genealogies and ramifications of some single families to a vast extension may be preserved.
Hale.

2. Small branches.

As the blood and chyle pass together through the ramifications of the pulmonary artery, they will be still more perfectly mixed; but if a pipe is divided into branches, and these again subdivided, the red and the white liquors, as they pass through the ramifications, will be more intimately mixed; the more ramifications, the mixture will be the more perfect.
Arbutnot.

To RA'MIFY. v. a. [ramifier, Fr. ramus, and facio, Lat.] To separate into branches.

The mint, grown to have a pretty thick stalk, with the various and ramified roots, which it shot into the water, presented a spectacle not unpleasant to behold.
Boyle.

To RA'MIFY. v. n. To be parted into branches.

Asparagus affects the urine with a foetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality.
Arbutnot.

RA'MMER. n. f. [from ram.]

arian. Shakspeare.

RAMPAncy. n. f. [from rampant.] Prevalence; exuberance.

As they are come to this height and rampancy of vice, from the countenance of their betters, so they have took some steps in the same, that the extravagances of the young carry with them the approbation of the old. South.

RAMPAnt. adj. [rampant, French; from ramp.]

1. Exuberant; overgrowing restraint.

The foundation of this behaviour towards persons set apart for the service of God, can be nothing else but atheism; the growing rampant sin of the times.
South.

The seeds of death grow up, till, like rampant weeds, they choak the tender flower of life. Clarissa.

2. In heraldry.

Rampant is when the lion is reared up in the escutcheon, as it were ready to combat with his enemy. Peacocks.

At needy random; but my breath to breake
In sacred oaths, Ulysses shall return. Chapman.

Thy words at random argue inexperience. Milton.
He lies at random carelessly diffus'd,
With languish'd head unpropt,
As one past hope abandon'd. Milton.

R A N

Fond love his darts at random throws,
And nothing springs from what he sows. Waller.

The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity:
the angle, which the missile is to mount by, if we will have it go to its furthest random, must be the half of a right one; and the figure of the missile must be such, as may give scope to the air to bear it.
Digby.

In the days of old the birds lived at random in a lawless state of anarchy; but in time they moved for the setting up of a king. L'Estrange.

Who could govern the dependence of one event upon another, if that event happened at random, and was not cast into a certain relation to some foregoing purpose to direct? South.

'Tis one thing when a person of true merit is drawn as like as as we can; and another, when we make a fine thing at random, and persuade the next vain creature that 'tis his own likeness. Pope.

RANDOM. adj. Done by chance; roving without direction.

Virtue borrow'd but the arms of chance,
And struck a random blow; 'twas fortune's work,
And fortune take the praise. Dryden.

New-laid eggs, with Baucis' busy care,
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

RARESHOW. n. f. [This word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.

The fashions of the town affect us just like a rareefhow, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more. Pope.

Of rareefhow, he sung, and Punch's seats. Gay.
RAREFACTION. n. f. [rarefaction, French; from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before; contrary to condensation.

The water within being rarefied, and by rare-faction resolved into wind, will force up the smok.
Wotton.

When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of the earth by rarefaction or compression, come to be straitened, they strive every way to set themselves at liberty. Burnett.

RAREFIABLE. adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.

TO RAREFY. v. a. [rarefier, French;
rarus and facio, Latin; rarefy were more proper.] To make thin: contrary to condense.

To the hot equator crowding fast,
Where highly rarefied the yielding air Admits their steam. Thomson.

TO RAREFY. v. n. To become thin.

Earth rarefies to dew; expanded more,
The subtil dew in air begins to soar. Dryden.

RARELY. adv. [from rare.]

1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.

His temperance in sleep resembled that of his meats; midnight being the usual time of his going to rest, and four or five, and very rarely six, the hour of his rising. Fell.

Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who lie
Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty. Dryden.
Vaneffa in her bloom,

Advanc'd like Atalanta's star,
But rarely seen, and seen from far. Swift.

2. Finely; nicely; accurately. This is now seldom used but ironically.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shaksf.

RARENESS. n. f. [from rare.]

1. Uncommonness; state of happening seldom; infrequency.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes, and sides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joined with the rareness of being touched there; for tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, the suddenness and rareness of touch, doth further. Bacon.

For the rareness and rare effect of that petition,
I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.

Of my heart I now a present make;
Accept it as when early fruit we send,
And let the rareness the small gift commend. Dryd.

2. Value arising from scarcity.

Roses set in a pool, supported with some stay, is matter of rareness and pleasure, though of small use.
Bacon.

To worthiest things,
Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. Donne.

3. Thinness; tenuity.

4. Distance from each other; thinness.

RARITY. n. f. [rariété, French; raritas,
Latin.]

1. Uncommonness; infrequency.

Far from being fond of any flower for its rarity, if I meet with any in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. Spectator.

2. A thing valued for its scarcity.

Sorrow would be a rarity most belov'd,
If all could so become it. Shakspeare.
It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could any one shew us such a thing as a perfectly reconciled enemy. South.

I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleased me more than any other shews of the place.
Addison.

3. Thinness, subtilty: the contrary to density.

Bodies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thinness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density.

This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos.

RASCAL. n. s. [rajcal, Saxon, a lean beast.]

1. A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a sorry wretch.

For the rascal commons, left he cared. Spenser.
And when him list the rascal routs appal,
Men into stones therewith he could transmute.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from his friends:
Be ready, gods, with all your thunder-bolts,
Dash him to pieces.

The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor.

But for our gentlemen,
The mouse ne'er shun'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they.

I am accus'd to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath remov'd my horse.

Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contest with mean rascals.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay snug to snugg young Damon's goat?

I have sense, to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more.

The poor girl provoked told him he lyed like a rascal.

2. RASCAL deer, are still mentioned for lean deer.

RASCALION. n. s. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people.

That proud dame
Us'd him so like a base rascalion,
That old Pig—what d'ye call him—malion,
That cut his mistress out of stone,
Had not so hard a hearted one.

RASCALITY. n. s. [from rascal.] The low mean people.

Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rascality in theirs.

Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying, and admitting the rascality and lowest of the people to minister in that service.

RASCALLY. adj. [from rascal.] Mean; worthless.

Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheepbiter come by some notable shame?

Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and sconces, or we might have been tacking up by this time.

TO RASE. v. a. [This word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perstringere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, de-lere; razer, Fr. rasus, Lat.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.

He certifies your lordship, that this night
He dreamt the bear had raised off his helm.

Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death?
and might not the bullet, that raised his cheek,
have gone into his head.

2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.

Her battering engines bent to rase some city.

3. To blot out by rasure; to erase.

Though of their names in heav'nly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and raised.

RASE. n. s. [from To rase.]

VOL. II.

1. A cancel.

2. A slight wound.

RASH. adj. [rasch, Dutch.]

1. Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.

This is to be bold without shame, rash without skill, full of words without wit.

Blast her pride, O ye blest gods! so will you wish on me, when the rash mood is on me.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few.

Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forthreached to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat.

2. Hasty; requiring haste. Not in use.

I have scarce leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash.

3. Quick; sudden: as, rash gunpowder.
Out of use.

RASH. n. s. [raschia, Italian.]

1. Sattin.

2. [corrupted probably from rasb.] An efflorescence of the body; a breaking out.

RASHER. n. s. [rasura lardi, Lat.] A thin slice of bacon.

If we grow all to be pork eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasber on the coals for money.

White and black was all her homely cheer,
And rasbers of sing'd bacon on the coals.

Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty rasber from the coals.

RASHLY. adv. [from rasb.] Hastily; violently; without due consideration.

This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rashly plotted.

Men are not rashly to take that for done, which is not done.

He that doth any thing rashly, must do it willingly; for he was free to deliberate or not.

Declare the secret villain,
The wretch so meanly base to injure Phædra,
So rashly brave to dare the sword of Theseus.

RASHNESS. n. s. [from rasb.] Foolish contempt of danger; inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.

Who seeth not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in as much as there is not one, but hath had many things esta-blish'd in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rashness.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispence,
But with cold prudence age doth recompence.

In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth;
yet we offend not properly by falsehood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rashness, which is an affirming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves.

The vain Morat by his own rashness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought,

Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair.

RASP. n. s. [raspo, Ital.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble;
a raspberry.

Set sorrel amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to wines.

TO RASP. v. a. [raspen, Dut. rasper, Fr.] raspare, Ital.] To rub to powder with a very rough file.

Some authors have advis'd the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless.

Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes.

RASP. n. s. [from the verb.] A large rough file commonly used to wear away wood.

RASPBERRY-BUSH. es of bramble.

RASURE. n. s. [rasura, an.]

1. The act of scraping or shaving.

2. A mark in a writing where something has been rubbed out.

Such a writing ought to be free from any vituperation of rasure.

RAT. n. s. [ratte, Dut. rat, Fr. ratto, Span.] An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.

Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane.

Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs,
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle.

I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.

Thus horses will knable at walls, and rats will gnaw iron.

If in despair he goes out of the way like a rat,
with a dose of arsenick, why he dies nobly.

TO SMELL A RAT. To be put on the watch by suspicion, as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.

Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat,
Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate.

RATABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.

The Danes brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras; I collect out of the abbey-book of Burton, that twenty oras were ratable to two marks of silver.

RATABLELY. adv. Proportionably.

Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratably by that quantity of the great ordnance.

RATAFIA. n. s. A liquor, prepared from the kernels of apricots and spirits.

RATA'N. n. s. An Indian cane.

RATCH. n. s. In clockwork, a sort of wheel, which serves to lift up the de-tents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike.

RATE. n. s. [ratus, Lat. rate, old Fr.]

1. Price fixed on any thing.

How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected?

I'll not betray the glory of my name,
'Tis not for me, who have preserv'd a state,
To buy an empire at so base a rate.

The price of land has never changed, the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law; nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same.

2. Allowance settled.

His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily rate for every day.

They oblig'd themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into so many monthly payments.

3. Something snatched away rate;
Sad widows by thee rend upon my state. Shaksp.
And ruin'd orphans holiness and godliness appear Where now and pitch of other mens, in that Shall the infinitely merciful. Calamy.
Which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, it morally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil. South.
4. Quantity assignable.
In goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shaksp.
5. That which sets value; principle on which value is set.
Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as deserved to have the tongue cut out. South.
A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy as a virtuous christian. Atterbury.
6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.
I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridged
From such a noble rate. Shaksp.
Many of the horse could not march at that rate,
nor come up soon enough. Clarendon.
Tom hinting his dislike of some trifle his mistress had said, she asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? Addison.
7. Tax imposed by the parish.
They paid the church and parish rate,
And took, but read not the receipt. Prior.
- TO RATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To value at a certain price.
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And yet, dear lady,
Rating myself as nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. Shaksp.
We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concentrate into felicity. Boyle.
You seem not high enough your joys to rate,
You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,
And should large thanks for the great blessing pay. Dryden.
2. [reita, Islandick.] To chide hastily and vehemently.
Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boy;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign? Shaksp.
An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir. Shaksp.
What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's converse, comparable to what he feels for one hour, when his conscience shall take him aside and rate
him by himself? South.
If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.
- TO RATE. v. n. To make an estimate.
In rating, when things are thus little and frivolous, we must not judge by our own pride and passions, which count nothing little, but aggrandize every affront or injury that is done to ourselves. Kettlewell.
- RATH. n. s. A hill. I know not whence derived.
There is a great use among the Irish, to make great assemblies upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons. Spenser.
- RATH. adj. [nað, Sax. quickly.] Early;
coming before the usual time.
Thus is my summer worn away and wasted,
Thus is my harvest hasten'd all to rathe,
The ear, that bud'd fair, is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scathe. Spenser.
Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,
Of golden some, and some of purple rind. May.

- Bring the rath primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe and pale jessamine. Milton.
- RA'THER. adv. [This is a comparative from rath; nað, Sax. soon. Now out of use. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]
1. More willingly; with better liking.
Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. Common Prayer.
2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.
'Tis rather to be thought, that an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undeterminate who such heir is. Locke.
3. In a greater degree than otherwise.
He fought through the world, but fought in vain,
And no where finding, rather fear'd her slain. Dry.
4. More properly.
This is an art,
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
The art itself is nature. Shaksp.
5. Especially.
You are come to me in a happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shaksp.
6. TO HAVE RATHER. [This is, I think, a barbarous expression of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.
'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impenitence to apply the discipline of severity; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor. Rogers.
- RATIFICATION. n. s. [ratification, Fr.
from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirmation.
- RATIFIER. n. s. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.
They cry, "chuse we Laertes for our king:"
The ratifiers and props of every word,
Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shaksp.
- TO RATIFY. v. a. [ratum facio, Latin.]
To confirm; to settle; to establish.
The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, no less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.
By the help of these, with him above
To ratify the work, we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shaksp.
We have ratified unto them the borders of Judaea. 1 Maccabees.
God ratified their prayers by the judgment brought down upon the head of him whom they prayed against. South.
Tell me, my friend, from whence had'st thou
the skill,
So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
And what thou art to follow, what to fly,
This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.
- RATIO. n. s. [Lat.] Proportion.
Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne.
- TO RATIOCINATE. v. n. [ratiocinor, Lat.] To reason; to argue.
- RATIOCINATION. n. s. [ratiocinatio, Lat.]
The act of reasoning; the act of de-ducing consequences from premises.
In simple terms, expressing the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into syllogisms and forms of *ratio*cination. Brown.
The discerning of that connexion or dependence which there is betwixt several propositions, whereby we are enabled to infer one proposition from another, which is called *ratio*cination or discourse. Wilkins.
Can any kind of *ratio*cination allow Christ al

- the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.
Such an inscription would be self-evident without any *ratio*cination or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Bentley.
- RATIOCINATIVE. adj. [from *ratio*cinate.]
Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.
Some consecutions are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of *ratio*cinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any pre-
- RATIONAL. adj. [rationalis, Latin.]
1. Having the power of reasoning.
God decreed to create man after his own image,
a free and rational agent. Hammond.
As that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, considered as a sensitive being, is stiled natural good; so that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, as a rational, voluntary and free agent, is stiled moral good; and the contrary to it moral evil. Wilkins.
If it is our glory and happiness to have a rational nature, that is endued with wisdom and reason, that is capable of imitating the divine nature; then it must be our glory and happiness to improve our reason and wisdom, to act up to the excellency of our rational nature, and to imitate God in all our actions, to the utmost of our power. Law.
2. Agreeable to reason.
What higher in her society thou find'st
Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton.
When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glanville.
If your arguments be rational, offer them in as moving a manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetic part swallow up the rational. Swift.
3. Wise; judicious: as, a rational man.
- RATIONALE. n. s. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons: as, Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.
- RATIONALIST. n. s. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.
He often used this comparison; the empirical philosophers are like to pismires; they only lay up and use their store: the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.
- RATIONALITY. n. s. [from rational.]
1. The power of reasoning.
When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thy inclosure? Government of the Tongue.
2. Reasonableness.
In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown.
- RATIONALLY. adv. [from rational.] Reasonably; with reason.
Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationality be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it. Scrub.
- RATIONALNESS. n. s. [from rational.]
The state of being rational.
- RATSBANE. n. s. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenick.
He would throw ratsbane up and down a house,
where children might come at it. L'Estrange.
When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
Unless the new-found pois'ning trick of France;
And when their art of ratsbane we have got,
By way of thanks, we'll send 'em o'er our plot. Dryden.
I can hardly believe the relation of his being poisoned, but sack might do it, though ratsbane would not. Swift to Pope.
- RATTEE. n. s. A kind of stuff.
We'll rig in Meath-street Egypt's haughty queen,
And Anthony shall court her in ratteen. Swift.

To RA'TTLE. v. n. [ratelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a quick sharp noise with frequent repetitions and collision of bodies not very sonorous: when bodies are sonorous, it is called jingling.

The quiver rattlet against him. Job.

The noise of a whip, of the rattling of the wheels, of prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nabum.

They had, to affright the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment, and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service. Hayward.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell; He fagored his notions as they fell, And if they rhym'd and rattled all was well. Dryden.

There she assembles all her blackest storms, And the rude hail in rattling tempest forms. Addis.

2. To speak eagerly and noisily.

With jealous eyes at distance she hath seen Whisp'ring with Jove the silver-footed queen; Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke, Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.

He is a man of pleasure, and a free-thinker; he is an assertor of liberty and property; he rattles it out against popery. Swift.

To RA'TTLE. v. a.

1. To move any thing so as to make a rattle or noise.

Her chains she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden.

2. To stun with a noise; to drive with a noise.

Sound but another, and another shall, As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear, And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder. Shakspeare.

He should be well enough able to scatter the Irish as a flight of birds, and rattle away this swarm of bees with their king. Bacon.

3. To scold; to rail at with clamour.

Hearing Æsop had been beforehand, he sent for him in a rage, and rattled him with a thousand traitors and villains for fobbing his house. L'Estr.

She that would sometimes rattle off her servants sharply, now if she saw them drunk, never took notice. Arbutnot.

RA'TTLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick noise nimble repeated.

I'll hold ten pound my dream is out; I'd tell it you but for the rattle Of those confounded drums. Prior.

2. Empty and loud talk.

All this ado about the golden age, is but an empty rattle and frivolous conceit. Hakewill.

3. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.

The rattles of liss and the cymbals of Brasília nearly enough resemble each other. Raleigh. Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them. Glanville.

They want no rattles for their froward mood, Nor nurse to reconcile them to their food. Dryden. Fawwel then verse, and love, and ev'ry toy, The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy; What right, what true, what fit we justly call, Let this be all my care, for this is all. Pope.

4. A plant. [crista galli, Latin.] An herb resembling a cock's comb; lousewort.

RA'TTLEHEADED. adj. [rattle and head.] Giddy; not steady.

RA'TTLESNAKE. n. s. A kind of serpent. The rattlesnake is so called, from the rattle at the end of his tail. Grew.

She loses her being at the very sight of him, and drops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird into the mouth of a rattlesnake. More.

RATTLESNAKE Root. n. s.

Rattlesnake root, called also seneka, belongs to a plant, a native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake. Hill.

To RAVAGE. v. a. [ravager, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.

Already Cæsar

Has ravaged more than half the globe, and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Add.

His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill, The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale. Thomf.

RA'VAGE. n. s. [ravage, Fr. from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.

Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise, To view the mighty ravage of your eyes. Dryden.

Would one think 'twere possible for love To make such ravage in a noble soul! Addison.

Those savages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, without arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage and devouring beasts. Bentley.

RA'VAGER. n. s. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.

When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors; and what remained was carried off by those ravagers. Swift.

RA'VCITY. n. s. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.

Inequality not stayed upon, but passing, is rather an encrease of sweetness; as in the purling of a wreathed string, and in the raucity of a trumpet. Bacon.

To RAVE. v. n. [reven, Dut. rêver, Fr.]

1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.

Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such. Gov. of the Tongue.

It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving. Wiseman.

Her grief has wrought her into frenzy; The images her troubled fancy forms

Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed: Sometimes the rares for musick, light, and air;

Nor air, nor light, nor musick calm her pains. Smith.

2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.

Shall these wild distempers of thy mind, This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find No opposition? Sandys.

Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air, at no mark, and so to no purpose. Temple.

Wonder at my patience, Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast, To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted? Addison.

Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets, I'll cry for vengeance. Southern.

He swore he could not leave me, With ten thousand ravings. Rowe.

3. To be unreasonably fond: with upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.

Another partiality is as fantastical and wild, attributing all knowledge to the ancients or the moderns: this raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires. Locke.

To RA'VEL. v. a. [ravelen, Dutch, to entangle.]

1. To entangle; to entwine one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.

If then such praise the Macedonian got, For having nicely cut the Gordian knot; What glory's due to him that cou'd divide Such ravel'd int'rests, has the knot unt'y'd, And without stroke so smooth a passage made, Where craft and malice such obstructions laid? Waller.

2. To unweave; to unknot: as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.

Let him for a pair of reechy kisses Or padding in your neck with his damn'd fingers, Make you to ravel all this matter out. Shakspeare.

Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care. Shakspeare.

3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.

They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions; that at the first encounter of them single, seem harsh to them. Digby.

To RA'VEL. v. n.

1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.

As you unwind her love from him, Left it should ravel, and be good to none, You must provide to bottom it on me. Shakspeare.

Give the reins to wandering thought, Regardless of his glory's diminution;

Till by their own perplexities involv'd, They ravel more, still less resolv'd,

But never find self-satisfying solution. Milton.

2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.

It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances. Decay of Piety.

The humour of ravelling into all these mystical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes. Temple.

RA'VELIN. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers: it is raised before the courtines or counterescarp.

RA'VEN. n. s. [hnapn, Saxon.] A large black fowl, whose cry is supposed ominous.

The raven himself is hoarse That crokes the fatal entrance of Duncan Under my battlements. Shakspeare.

Come thou day in night, For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night, Whiter than snow upon a raven's back. Shakspeare.

I have seen a perfectly white raven, as to bill as well as feathers. Boyle.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias' caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

On sev'ral parts a sev'ral praise bestows, The ruby lips, and well-proportion'd nose, The snowy skin, the raven glossy hair, The dimpled cheek. Dryden.

The raven once in snowy plumes was drest, White as the whitest dove's unfully'd breast,

His tongue, his prating tongue had chang'd him quite To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.

Hence Gildon rails, that raven of the pit, Who thrives upon the carcases of wit. Young.

To RA'VEN. v. a. [napian, Saxon, to rob.] To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.

Thriftless ambition! that will raven up Thine own life's means. Shakspeare.

Our natures do pursue, Like rats that raven down their proper bane, A thirty evil; and when we drink we die. Shakspeare.

The cloyed will That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire, that tub Both filled and running, ravens first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage. Shakspeare.

There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a roaring lion ravens the prey. Ezekiel.

To RA'VEN. v. n. To prey with rapacity.

Benjamin shall raven as a wolf; in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil. Genesis.

They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravens and a roaring lion. Psalms.

The more they fed, they raven'd still for more, They drain'd from Dan, and left Beerseba poor;

But when some lay preferment fell by chance, The Gourmands made it their inheritance. Dryden.

Convulsions rack man's nerves and caries his breast, His flying life is chas'd by ravens pains. Blackmore.

Through all his doubles in the winding veins, RA'VENOUS. adj. [from raven.] Furiously voracious; hungry to rage.

R A V

Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shakspeare.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcases. Milton.
What! the kind Ismena,
That nurs'd me, watch'd my sickness! oh, she watch'd me,
As ravenous vultures watch the dying lion. Smith.
RA'VENOUSLY. adv. [from ravenous.]
With raging voracity.
RA'VENOUSNESS. n. f. [from ravenous.]
Rage for prey; furious voracity.
The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence.
Hale.
RAUGHT. The old pret. and part. pass. of reach. Snatched; reached; attained.
His tail was stretched out in wondrous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.
In like delights of bloody game
He trained was till riper years he raught,
And there abode whilst any beast of name
Walk'd in that forest. Spenser.
This staff of honour raught, there let it stand,
Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand. Shakspeare.
The hand of death has raught him. Shakspeare.
Gritus furiously running in upon Schenden, violently raught from his head his rich cap of fables, and with his horsemen took him. Knolles.
RA'VIN. n. f. [from raven; this were better written raven.]
1. Prey; food gotten by violence.
The lion strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. Nabum.
To me, who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n;
There best, where most with ravin I may meet. Milton.
2. Rapine; rapaciousness.
They might not lie in a condition exposed to the ravin of any vermin that may find them, being unable to escape. Ray.
RA'VINGLY. adv. [from rave.] With frenzy; with distraction.
In this depth of muses and divers sorts of discourses, would she ravingly have remained. Sidney.
To RA'VISH. v. a. [ravir, French.]
1. To conspurate by force; to deflour by violence.
They ravished the women and maids. Lament.
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her. Shakspeare.
2. To take away by violence.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakspeare.
Their vow is made
To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen sleeps. Shakspeare.
His fire appear'd;
And all his praise, to every syllable heard;
But then a rocke, in size more amplified,
Then first he ravish'd to him. Chapman.
I owe myself the care,
My fame and injur'd honour to repair;
From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite,
This hand shall ravish thy pretended right. Dryden.
3. To delight to rapture; to transport.
Thou hast ravish'd my heart. Canticles.
Be thou ravish'd always with her love. Proverbs.
RA'VISH. n. f. [ravisseur, French; from ravish.]
1. He that embraces a woman by violence.
They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children. Spenser.
A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the maid, and give her a dowry, or marry her if she desire it. Taylor.

R A W

Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes!
For if more charms beneath those circles rise,
So weak my virtue, they so strong appear,
I shall turn ravisher to keep you here. Dryden.
2. One who takes any thing by violence.
Shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the sops envy, and the ladies stare? Pope.
RA'VISHINGLY. adv. [from ravishing.]
To extremity of pleasure.
As all the housewiferies of deities are
To heare a voice so ravishingly fair. Chapman.
RA'VISHMENT. n. f. [ravissement, French;
from ravish.]
1. Violation; forcible constupration.
Of his several ravishments, betrayings and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables of his transformations and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.
Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens. Taylor.
I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment. Dryden.
2. Transport; rapture; ecstasy; pleasing violence on the mind.
All things joy, with ravishment
Attracted by the beauty still to gaze. Milton.
Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment? Milton.
What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to measure Hiero's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly possest, ran naked up and down! Wilkins.
RAW. adj. [hneap, Saxon; raa, Danish;
rouw, Dutch.]
1. Not subdued by the fire.
Full of great lumps of flesh, and gobbets raw.
Spenser.
2. Not covered with the skin.
All aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw. Shakspeare.
If there be quick raw flesh in the risings, it is an old leprosy. Leviticus.
3. Sore.
This her knight was feeble and too faint,
And all his sinews waxen weak and raw
Through long imprisonment. Spenser.
4. Immature; unripe; not concocted.
5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill.
Some people, very raw and ignorant, are very unworthily and unfitly nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred.
Raleigh.
People, while young and raw, and soft-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's; but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God. South.
Sails were spread to ev'ry wind that blew,
Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new. Dryden.
Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue.
Young as thou wert in dangers, raw to war. Dryd.
6. New. This seems to be the meaning.
I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging jacks. Shakspeare.
7. Bleak; chill.
They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed, and their garment; and coming lastly into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate.
Spenser.
Youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day. Shakspeare.
Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chasing with his shores. Shakspeare.
8. Not decocted.
Distilled waters will last longer than raw waters. Bacon.
9. Not spun or twisted: as, raw filk.
RA'WBONED. adj. [raw and bone.] Having bones scarcely covered with flesh.

R A Z

Lean razorbon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage? Shakspeare.
The wolf was content to barter away a razorboned
carcase for a smooth and fat one. L'Estrange.
RA'WHEAD. n. f. [raw and head.] The name of a spectre, mentioned to fright children.
Hence draw thy theme, and to the stage permit
Rawhead and bloody bones, and hands and feet;
Ragousts for Tereus or Thyestes drest. Dryden.
Servants awe children, and keep them in subjection, by telling them of rawhead and bloody bones. Locke.
RA'WLY. adv. [from raw.]
1. In a raw manner.
2. Unskilfully; without experience.
3. Newly.
Some crying for a surgeon, some upon the debts
they owe, some upon their children rawly left. Shakspeare.
RA'WNESS. n. f. [from raw.]
1. State of being raw.
Chalk helpeth concoction, so it be out of a deep well; for then it cureth the rawness of the water. Bacon.
2. Unskilfulness.
Charles v. considering the rawness of his seamen, established a pilot major for their examination. Hakewill.
3. Hasty manner. This seems to be the meaning in this obscure passage.
Why in that rawness left he wife and children Without leave taking? Shakspeare.
RAY. n. f. [raie, rayon, Fr. radius, Lat.]
1. A beam of light.
These eyes that roll in vain
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.
The least light, or part of light, which may be stopt alone, or do or suffer any thing alone, which the rest of the light doth not or suffers not, I call a ray of light. Newton.
Sol through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray,
And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.
2. Any lustre corporeal or intellectual.
The air sharpen'd his visual ray. Milton.
He now, observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sunset of thy various day. Pope.
3. [raye, French; raia, Latin.] A fish.
Ainsworth.
4. [lolium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
To RAY. v. a. [rayer, Fr. from the noun.]
To streak; to mark in long lines. An old word.
Beside a bubbling fountain low she lay,
Which she increased with her bleeding heart,
And the clean waves with purple gore did ray. Spenser.
His horse is raied with the yellows. Shakspeare.
Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so raied?
was ever man so weary? Shakspeare.
RAY, for array. Spenser.
RAZE. n. f. [rayz, a root, Spanish.] A root of ginger. This is commonly written race, but less properly.
I have a garamon of bacon and two razes of ginger to be delivered. Shakspeare.
To RAZE. v. a. [razer, Fr. rasus, Lat.]
See RASE.
1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert.
Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built soever, but yet a temple of your deity, to be razed? Sidney.
He yoketh your rebellious necks,
*Raze*th your cities, and subverts your towns. Shakspeare.
It grieved the tyrant, that so base a town should so long hold out, so that he would threaten to raze it. Knolles.
Shed christian blood, and populous cities raze;
Because they're taught to use some diff'rent phrase. Waller.
We touch'd with joy
The royal hand that raz'd unhappy Troy. Dryden.
The place would be razed to the ground, and its foundations sown with salt. Spektator.
2. To efface.

REA

REA

REA

Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Razing the characters of your renown. Shakspeare.
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain. Shaks.
He in derision sets
Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze
Quite out their native language; and instead,
To sow a jangling noise of words. Milton.

3. To extirpate.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their factions and their family. Shakspeare.

RAZOR. n. f. [rasor, Latin.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.
Zeal, except ordered aright, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazarded. Hooker.
These words are razors to my wounded heart.
Shakspeare.
Those thy boist'rous locks, not by the sword
Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdu'd. Milton.
Razor makers generally clap a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor. Moxon.
As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set,
Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen. Young.

RAZORS of a boar. A boar's tusks.

RAZORABLE. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.
New-born chins be rough and razorable. Shakspeare.

RAZORFISH. n. f.
The sheath or razorfish resembleth in length and bigness a man's finger. Carew.

RAZURE. n. f. [rasure, Fr. rasura, Lat.]
Act of erasing.
Oh! your desert speaks loud;
It well deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And razure of oblivion. Shakspeare.

RE. Is an inseparable particle used by the Latins, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action: as, return, to come back; to revive, to live again; repercussion, the act of driving back: reciprocation, as, to recriminate.
It is put almost arbitrarily before verbs and verbal nouns, so that many words so compounded will perhaps be found, which it was not necessary to insert. It sometimes adds little to the simple meaning of the word, as in rejoice.

REACCE'SS. n. f. [re and access.] Visit renewed.
Let pass the quailing and withering of all things by the recess, and their reviving by the reaccess of the sun. Hakewill.

To REACH. v. a. ancient preterit raught.
[racan, Saxon.]

1. To touch with the hand extended.
Round the tree
They longing stood, but could not reach. Milton.
What are riches, empire, pow'r,
But larger means to gratify the will;
The steps by which we climb to rise and reach Our wish, and that obtained, down with a scaffolding
Of scepters, crowns and thrones: they've serv'd their end,
And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd?
Congreve.

2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.
The coast so long desir'd
Thy troops shall reach, and having reach'd, repent.
Dryden.
What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding line, he reaches no bottom. Locke.

It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands. Pope.

3. To strike from a distant place.
O patron pow'r, thy present aid afford,
That I may reach the beast! Dryden.

4. To fetch from some place distant, and give.
He reached me a full cup. 2 Esdras.

5. To bring forward from a distant place.
Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands;
and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side. John.

6. To hold out; to stretch forth.
These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which desire them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them. Hooker.

7. To attain; to gain; to obtain.
The best accounts of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, come short of its reality. Cheyne.

8. To transfer.
Through such hands
The knowledge of the gods is reach'd to man. Rowe.

9. To penetrate to.
Whatever alterations are made in the body, if they reach not the mind, there is no perception. Locke.

10. To be adequate to.
The law reached the intention of the promoters,
and this act fixed the natural price of money. Locke.
If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine. Locke.

11. To extend to.
Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame. Milton.
Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
They shut not out society in death. Addison.

12. To extend; to spread abroad.
Trees reach'd too far their pamper'd boughs. Milton.

13. To take in the hand.
Left he reach of the tree of life, and eat. Milton.

To REACH. v. n.

1. To be extended.
We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws, doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach. Hooker.
The new-world reaches quite cross the torrid zone in one tropick to the other. Boyle.
When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reached no farther. Locke.
If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be buried by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave. Addison.
The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not in the power of reason. Swift.

2. To be extended far.
Great men have reaching hands. Shakspeare.

3. To penetrate.
He hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage, that reacheth up into heaven. 2 Chronicles.
We reach forward into futurity, and bring up to our thoughts objects hid in the remotest depths of time. Addison.

4. To make efforts to attain.
Could a sailor always supply new line, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity. Locke.

REACH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of touching or seizing by extension of the hand.

2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.
There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open.
Locke.

3. Power of attainment or management.
In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him. Locke.

4. Power; limit of faculties.
Our sight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into our reach some of the most remote parts of the universe. Addison.
Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go. Pope.

5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.
Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended.
Hayward.
Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches. Howel.

6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.
The duke of Parma had particular reaches and ends of his own underhand, to cross the design.
Bacon.

7. Tendency to distant consequences.
Strain not my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakspeare.

8. Extent.
The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
And of this world: and, on the left hand, hell
With long reach interpos'd. Milton.

To REACT. v. a. [re and act.] To return
the impulse or impression.
The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly.
Arbutnot.
Cut your hand, and you may do
With t' other hand the work of two;
Because the soul her power contracts,
And on the brother limb reacts. Swift.

REACTION. n. f. [reaction, Fr. from react.]
The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.
Do not great bodies conserve their heat the longest,
their parts heating one another; and may not great,
dense, and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflections and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain degree of heat, such as is that of the sun. Newton.
Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them. Arbutnot.

READ. n. f. [racd, Saxon; raed, Dutch.]

1. Counsel.
The man is blest that hath not lent
To wicked read his ear. Sternhold.

2. Saying; saw. This word is in both senses obsolete.
This read is rife that oftentime
Great cumbers fall unsoft,
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trade is not so tickle. Spenser.

To READ. v. a. pret. read; part. pass.
read. [racd, Saxon.]

1. To peruse any thing written.
I have seen her take forth paper, write upon't, read it, and afterwards seal it. Shakspeare.
The passage you must have read, though since slipt out of your memory. Pope.
If we have not leisure to read over the book itself regularly, then by the titles of chapters we may be directed to peruse several sections. Watts.

2. To discover by characters or marks.
An armed corse did lye
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity.
Spenser.

3. To learn by observation.
Those about her
From her shall read the perfect ways of honour. Shakspeare.

4. To know fully.
O must delicate fiend!
Who is't can read a woman? Shakspeare.

To READ. v. n.

1. To perform the act of perusing writing.
It shall be with him, and he shall read therein, that he may learn to fear the Lord. Deuteronomy.
 2. To be studious in books.
'Tis sure that Fleury reads. Taylor.
 3. To know by reading.
I have read of an eastern king, who put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence. Swift.

REA'SON. n. s. [raison, French; ratio, Latin.]

1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty; discursive power.

Reason is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason. Hooker.

Though brutish that contest and foul, When reason hath to deal with force; yet so Most reason is that reason overcome. Milton.

I appeal to the common judgment of mankind, whether the humane nature be not so framed, as to acquiesce in such a moral certainty, as the nature of things is capable of; and if it were otherwise, whether that reason which belongs to us, would not prove a burden and a torment to us, rather than a privilege, by keeping us in a continual suspense, and thereby rendering our conditions perpetually restless and unquiet. Wilkins.

Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers, Is reason to the soul: and as on high, Those rowling fires discover but the sky, Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way, But guide us upward to a better day. Dryden.

It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive: how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives? reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually swayed and turned by his interests, his passions, and his vices. Swift.

2. Cause; ground or principle.

What the apostles deemed rational and probable means to that end, there is no reason or probability to think should ever in any produce this effect. Hammond.

Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness. Tillotson.

3. Efficient cause.

Spain is thin sown of people, partly by reason of the sterility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Such a benefit, as by the antecedent will of Christ is intended to all men living, though all men, by reason of their own demerits, do not actually receive the fruit of it. White.

The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel. Hale.

By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate, I have been over-ruled to approach this place. Spratt.

I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse; partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden.

4. Final cause.

Reason, in the English language, sometimes is taken for true and clear principles; sometimes for clear and fair deductions; sometimes for the cause, particularly the final cause. Locke.

5. Argument; ground of persuasion; motive.

I mark the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspeare.

If it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude, that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose? Tillotson.

If we commemorate any mystery of our redemption, or article of our faith, we ought to confirm our belief of it, by considering all those reasons upon which it is built; that we may be able to give a good account of the hope that is in us. Nelson.

6. Ratiocination; discursive act.

When she rates things, and moves from ground to ground,
The name of reason she obtains by this;
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fixt, the understanding is. Davies.

7. Clearness of faculties.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakspeare.
When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakspeare.

8. Right; justice.

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme:
From that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser.
Are you in earnest?
—Ay, and resolv'd withal
To do myself this reason and this right. Shakspeare.

The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition and authority. Stillington.

Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;
Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart. Dryden.

9. Reasonable claim; just practice.

God brings good out of evil; and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Taylor.

Conscience, not acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous thing; and, for any one by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South.

A severe reflection Montaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them. Dryden.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have. Tillotson.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

10. Rationale; just account.

This reason did the ancient fathers render, why the church was called Catholick. Pearson.

To render a reason of an effect or phenomenon, is to deduce it from something else more known than itself. Boyle.

11. Moderation; moderate demands.

The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison.

To REA'SON. v. n. [raisonner, French.]

1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises.

No man, in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second; for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar, by receiving one alms, can merit another. South.

Ideas, as ranked under names, are those, that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke.

Every man's reasoning and knowledge is only about the ideas existing in his own mind; and our knowledge and reasoning about other things is only as they correspond with those our particular ideas. Locke.

Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost
In high ambition. Addison.

In the lonely grove,
'Twas there just and good he reason'd strong,
Clear'd some great truth, or rais'd some serious song. Tieckel.

2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account. Not in use.

Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this. Shak.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me in the narrow seas,
There miscarried a vessel of our country. Shakspeare.
Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. 1 Samuel.

3. To raise disquisitions; to make inquiries.

Jesus, perceiving their thoughts, said, what reason ye in your hearts?

They reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milt.
Down reason then, at least vain reasoning down. Milton.

To REA'SON. v. a. To examine rationally; This is a French mode of speech.

When they are clearly discovered, well digested, and well reasoned in every part, there is beauty in such a theory. Burnet.

REA'SONABLE. adj. [raison, French.]

1. Having the faculty of reasoning; endowed with reason.

She perceived her only son lay hurt, and that his hurt was so deadly, as that already his life had lost use of the reasonable and almost sensible part. Sidon.

2. Acting, speaking, or thinking rationally.

The parliament was dissolved, and gentlemen furnished with such forces, as were held sufficient to hold in bridle either the malice or rage of reasonable people. Hayward.

3. Just; rational; agreeable to reason.

By indubitable certainty, I mean that which doth not admit of any reasonable cause of doubting, which is the only certainty of which most things are capable. Wilkins.

A law may be reasonable in itself, although a man does not allow it, or does not know the reason of the law-givers. Swift.

4. Not immoderate.

Let all things be thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakspeare.

5. Tolerable; being in mediocrity.

I could with reasonable good manner receive the salutation of her and of the princess Pamela, doing them yet no further reverence than one princess oweth to another. Sidon.

A good way distant from the nigra rupes, there are four several lands of reasonable quantity. Abbot.

Notwithstanding these defects, the English colonies maintained themselves in a reasonable good estate, as long as they retained their own ancient laws. Davies.

REA'SONABLENESS. n. f. [from reasonable.]

1. The faculty of reason.

2. Agreeableness to reason.

They thought the work would be better done, if those, who had satisfied themselves with the reasonableness of what they wish, would undertake the converting and disposing of other men. Clarendon.

He that rightly understands the reasonableness and excellency of charity, will know, that it can never be excusable to waste any of our money in pride and folly. Law.

3. Compliance with reason.

The passive reason, which is more properly reasonableness, is that order and congruity which is impressed upon the thing thus wrought; as in a watch, the whole frame and contexture of it carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the reason or intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

4. Moderation.

REA'SONABLY. adv. [from reasonable.]

1. Agreeably to reason.

Chaucer makes Arcite violent in his love, and unjust in the pursuit of it; yet when he came to die, he made him think more reasonably. Dryden.

The church has formerly had eminent saints in that sex; and it may reasonably be thought, that it is purely owing to their poor and vain education, that this honour of their sex is for the most part confined to former ages. Law.

2. Moderately; in a degree reaching to mediocrity.

Some man reasonably studied in the law, should be persuaded to go thither as chancellor. Bacon.

If we can by industry make our deaf and dumb persons reasonably perfect in the language and pronunciation, he may be also capable of the same privilege of understanding by the eye what is spoken. Holder.

REA'SONER. n. f. [raisonneur, French; from reason.] One who reasons; an arguer.

Due reverence pay
To learned Epicurus; see the way
By which this reas'ner of so high renown Moves through th' ecliptick road the rolling sun. Blackmore.

The terms are loose and undefined; and what less becomes a fair reasoner, he puts wrong and invidious names on every thing to colour a false way of arguing. Addison.

Those reasoners, who employ so much of their zeal for the upholding the balance of power in christendom, by their practices are endeavouring to destroy it at home. Swift.

REA'SONING. n. f. [from reason.] Argument.

Those who would make use of solid arguments and strong reasonings to a reader of so delicate a turn, would be like that foolish people, who worshipped a fly, and sacrificed an ox to it. Addison.

Your reasonings therefore on this head, amount only to what the schools call ignoratio elenchi; proving before the question, on talking wide of the purpose. Waterland.

REA'SONLESS. adj. [from reason.] Void of reason.

This proffer is absurd and reasonless. Shakspeare.

Is it
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless to reason thus. Shakspeare.

That they wholly direct the reasonless mind, I am resolv'd; for all those which were created mortal, as birds and beasts, are left to their natural appetites. Raleigh.

These reasons in love's law have past for good,
Though fond and reasonless to some. Milton.

To REASSE'MBLE. v. a. [re and assemble.]

To collect anew.

There reassembling our afflicted pow'rs,
Consult how to offend our enemy. Milton.

To REASSE'RT. v. a. [re and assert.]

To assert anew; to maintain after suspension or cessation.

His steps I followed, his doctrine I reasserted. Atterbury.

Young Orestes grown
To manly years should reassert the throne. Pope.

To REASSUME. v. a. [reassumo, Latin;

re and assume.] To resume; to take again.

To him the Son return'd,
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd,
In glory as of old. Milton.

Nor only on the Trojans fell this doom,
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd reassume. Denb.

For this he reassumes the nod,
While Semele commands the god. Prior.

After Henry VIII. had reassumed the supremacy, a statute was made, by which all doctors of the civil law might be made chancellors. Ayliffe.

To REASSURE. v. a. [reassurer, French.]

To free from fear; to restore from terrour.

They rose with fear,
Till dauntless Pallas reassur'd the rest. Dryden.

REATE. n. s. A kind of long small grass that grows in water, and complicates itself together.

Let them lie dry six months to kill the water-weeds; as water-lilies, candocks, reate, and bul-rushes. Walton.

To REAVE. v. a. pret. reft. [næpian,
Saxon; whence to bereave.]

1. To take away by stealth or violence.
An obsolete word.

Dismounting from his lofty steed,
He to him leapt, in mind to reave his life. Spenser.
Some make his mealy bed, but reave his rest. Carew.

But these men, knowing, having heard the voice
Of God, by some means, that sad death hath reft
The ruler heere; will never suffer left Their unjust wooing of his wife. Chapman.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To do a murd'rous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shaksp.

2. It was used as well in a good as bad sense.

They fought my troubled sense how to deceive
With talk, that might inquiet fancies reave. Spens.

Each succeeding time addeth or reaveth goods and evils, according to the occasions itself produceth. Carew.

REBAPTIZA'TION. n. s. [rebaptization, French; from rebaptize.] Renewal of baptism.

In maintenance of rebaptization, their arguments are built upon this, that hereticks are not any part of the church of Christ. Hooker.

To REBAPTIZE. v. a. [rebaptiser, Fr.
re and baptize.] To baptize again.

Understanding that the rites of the church were observed, he approved of their baptism, and would not suffer them to be rebaptized. Ayliffe.

To REBA'TE. v. n. [rebattre, French.]

To blunt; to beat to obtuseness; to deprive of keenness.

He doth rebat and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast. Shaksp.

The icy goat, the crab which square the scales;
With those of aries trine consent to hate

The scales of libra, and her rays rebat. Creech.

He modifies his first severe decree;
The keener edge of battle to rebat,

The troops for honour fighting, not for hate. Dryd.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,

Their edge rebat. Dryden.

Their innocence unfeign'd long joys afford
To the honest nuptial bed, and, in the wane
Of life, rebat the miseries of age. Philips.

RE'BECK. n. s. [rebec, Fr. ribecca, Ital.]
A three stringed fiddle.

When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebecks sound,
To many a youth and many a maid,
Dancing in the checker'd shade. Milton.

REBEL. n. s. [rebelle, French; rebellis,
Vol. II.

Latin.] One who opposes lawful authority by violence.

The merciless Macdonel Worthy to be a rebel; for to that
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon him. Shaksp.

The rebels that are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shaksp.

Shall man from nature's sanction stray,
A rebel to her rightful sway? Fenton.

To REBEL. v. n. [rebello, Lat.] To rise in violent opposition against lawful authority.

Boys, immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment. Shaksp.

If they perceive dissention in our looks,
How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd
To wilful disobedience, and rebel? Shaksp.

Such smiling rogues as these soothe every passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels;
Bring oil to fire. Shaksp.

There was a time, when all the body's members
Rebell'd against the belly. Shaksp.

Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd. Milton.

How cou'd my hand rebel against my heart?
How cou'd your heart rebel against your reason?

Dryden.

Part of the angels rebelled against God, and thereby lost their happy state. Locke.

REBEL'LER. n. s. [from rebel.] One that rebels. DiEt.

REBEL'LION. n. s. [rebellion, Fr.; rebellio, Latin; from rebel.] Insurrection against lawful authority.

He was victorious in rebellions and seditions of people. Bacon.

Adam's sin, or the curse upon it, did not deprive him of rule, but left the creatures to a rebellion or reluctation. Bacon.

Of their names in heav'nly records now
Is no memorial, blotted out and raz'd
By their rebellion from the books of life. Milton.

REBEL'LIOUS. adj. [from rebel.] Opponent to lawful authority.

From the day that thou didst depart out of Egypt,
until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the Lord. Deuteronomy.

This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice. Deuteronomy.

Bent he seems
On desperate revenge, which shall redound
Upon his own rebellious head. Milton.

REBEL'LIOUSLY. adv. [from rebellious.]
In opposition to lawful authority.

When one shewed him where a nobleman, that had rebelliously born arms against him, lay very honourably intombed, and advised the king to deface the monument; he said, no, no, but I would all the rest of mine enemies were as honourably intombed.
Camden.

REBEL'LIOUSNESS. n. s. [from rebellious.]
The quality of being rebellious.

To REBEL'LOW. v. n. [re and bellow.]
To bellow in return; to echo back a loud noise.

He loudly bray'd with beastly yelling sound,
That all the fields rebellowed again. Spenser.

The resisting air the thunder broke,
The cave rebellow'd, and the temple shook. Dryd.

From whence were heard, rebellowing to the main,
The roars of lions. Dryden.

REBOA'TION. n. s. [rebo, Latin.] The return of a loud bellowing sound.

To REBOU'ND. v. n. [rebandir, French; re and bound.] To spring back; to be reverberated; to fly back in consequence of motion impressed and resisted by a greater power.

Whether it were a roaring voice of most savage wild beasts, or a rebounding echo from the hollow mountains. Wisd.

It with rebounding surge the bars assail'd. Mil.

Life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly with regard to the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively with regard to what may rebound to ourselves.

Government of the Tongue.
Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop.

Newton.
She bounding from the shelvy shore.
Round the descending nymph the waves rebounding roar. Pope.

To REBOU'ND. v. a.

1. To reverberate; to beat back.

All our invectives, at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

Silenus sung, the vales his voice rebound,
And carry to the skies the sacred sound. Dryden.

2. Prior has used it improperly.

Flow'rs, by the soft South West
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement.
Prior.

REBOU'ND. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of flying back in consequence of motion resisted; resiliation.

I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart. Shaksp.

If you strike a ball sidelong, not full upon the surface, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes may be tried. Bacon.

The weapon with unerring fury flew,
At his left shoulder aim'd: nor entrance found;
But back, as from a rock, with swift rebound
Harmless return'd. Dryden.

REBU'FF. n. s. [rebuffade, French; rebuffo, Italian.] Repercussion; quick and sudden resistance.

By ill chance
The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud, Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him
As many miles aloft. Milton.

To REBU'FF. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat back; to oppose with sudden violence.

To REBU'ILD. v. a. [re and build.] To re-edify; to restore from demolition; to repair.

The fines imposed there were the more questioned and repined against, because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing of St. Paul's church.
Clarendon.

Fine is the secret, delicate the art,
To raise the shades of heroes to our view,
Rebuild fall'n empires, and old time renew. Ticket

REBU'KABLE. adj. [from rebuke.] Worthy of reprehension.

Rebukable
And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On mere mechanick compliment. Shaksp.

To REBU'KE. v. a. [reboucher, French.]
To chide; to reprehend; to repress by objurgation.

I am ashamed; does not the stone rebuke me,
For being more stone than it? Shaksp.

He was rebuked for his iniquity; the dumb ass speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness o
the prophet. 2 Peter.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd. Dryden

REBU'KE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Reprehension; chiding expression; ob-jurgation.

Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not?
Shaksp.

If he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. Shaksp.

Thy rebuke hath broken my heart. Psalms.

The rebukes and chiding to children, should be in grave and dispassionate words. Locke

REC

Sh all Cibber's son, without rebuke, Swear like a lord? Pope.
Should vice expect to 'scape rebuke,
Because its owner is a duke? Swift.
2. In low language, it signifies any kind of check.
He gave him so terrible a rebuke upon the forehead with his heel, that he laid him at his length. L'Estrange.
REBU'KER. n. f. [from rebuke.] A chider;
a reprehender.
The revolvers are profound to make slaughter,
though I have been a rebuker of them all. Hofea.
RE'BUS. n. f. [rebus, Latin.] A word represented by a picture.
Some citizens, wanting arms, have coined themselves certain devices alluding to their names, which we call rebus. Master Jugge the printer, in many of his books, took, to express his name, a nightingale sitting in a bush with a scrole in her mouth, wherein was written jugge, jugge, jugge. Peacham.
To REBU'T. v. n. [rebuter, French.] To retire back. Obsolete.
Themselves too rudely rigorous,
Astonied with the stroke of their own hand,
Do back rebut, and each to other yielded land. Spen.
REBU'TTER. n. f. An answer to a rejoinder.
To RECA'LL. v. a. [re and call.] To call back; to call again; to revoke.
They who recal the church unto that which was at the first, must set bounds unto their speeches. Hooker.
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost. Shakspeare.
Neglected long, she let the secret rest,
Till love recall'd it to her lab'ring breast. Dryden.
It is strange the soul should never once recal over any of its pure native ideas, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never any other ideas, but what derive their original from that union. Locke.
To the churches, wherein they were ordained,
they might of right be recalled as to their proper church, under pain of excommunication. Ayliffe.
It is necessary to recall to the reader's mind, the desire Ulysses has to reach his own country. Broome.
If princes, whose dominions lie contiguous, be forced to draw from those armies which act against France, we must hourly expect having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us in the midst of a siege. Swift.
RECA'LL. n. f. [from the verb.] Revocation; act or power of calling back.
Other decrees
Against thee are gone forth, without recall. Milton.
'Tis done, and since 'tis done, 'tis past recal;
And since 'tis past recal, must be forgotten. Dryden.
To RECA'NT. v. a. [recanto, Latin.]
To retract; to recall; to contradict what one has once said or done.
He shall do this, or else I do recant
The pardon that I late pronounced. Shakspeare.
How soon would ease recant
Vows made in pain as violent and void? Milton.
To RECA'NT. v. n. To revoke a position;
to unsay what has been said.
If it be thought, that the praise of a translation consists in adding new beauties, I shall be willing to recant. Dryden.
That the legislature should have power to change
the succession, whenever the necessities of the kingdom require, is so useful towards preserving our religion and liberty, that I know not how to recant.
Swift.
RECANTA'TION. n. f. [from recant.] Retraction; declaration contradictory to a former declaration.
She could not see means to join this recantation
to the former vow. Sidney.
The poor man was imprisoned for this discovery,
and forced to make a public recantation. Stillingfl.
RECA'NTER. n. f. [from recant.] One who recants.

REC

The publick body, which doth seldom Play the recanter, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon. Shaksp.
To RECAPITULATE. v. a. [recapituler, French; re and capitulum, Latin.] To repeat the sum of a former discourse.
Hylobares judiciously and resentingly recapitu-lates your main reasonings. More.
I have been forced to recapitulate these things, because mankind is not more liable to deceit, than it is willing to continue in a pleasing error. Dryden.
RECAPITULA'TION. n. f. [from recapitu-late.] Distinct repetition of the principal points.
He maketh a recapitulation of the christian churches; among the rest he addeth the isle of Eden
by name. Raleigh.
Instead of raising any particular uses from the point that has been delivered, let us make a brief recapitulation of the whole. South.
RECAPITULATORY. adj. [from recapitu-late.] Repeating again.
Recapitulatory exercises. Garretson.
To RECA'RRY. v. a. [re and carry.] To carry back.
When the Turks besieged Malta or Rhodes, pigeons carried and re-carried letters. Walton.
To RECE'DE. v. n. [recedo, Latin.]
1. To fall back; to retreat.
A deaf noise of sounds that never cease,
Confus'd and chiding, like the hollow roar
Of tides, receding from th' insulted shoar. Dryden.
Ye doubts and fears!
Scatter'd by winds, recede, and wild in forests rove.
Prior.
All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not violently restrained by contiguous matter. Bentley.
2. To desist; to relax any claim.
I can be content to recede much from my own interests and personal rights. King Charles.
They hoped that their general assembly would be persuaded to depart from some of their demands; but that, for the present, they had not authority to recede from any one proposition. Clarendon.
RECEIPT. n. f. [receptum, Latin.]
1. The act of receiving.
Villain, thou did'st deny the gold's receipt,
And told me of a mistress. Shakspeare.
It must be done upon the receipt of the wound,
before the patient's spirits be overheated. Wifeman.
The joy of a monarch for the news of a victory must not be expressed like the ecstacy of a harlequin, on the receipt of a letter from his mistress. Dryden.
2. The place of receiving.
Jesus saw Matthew sitting at the receipt of custom.
Matthew.
3. [recepte, French.] A note given, by which money is acknowledged to have been received.
4. Reception; admission.
It is of things heavenly an universal declaration, working in them, whose hearts God inspireth with the due consideration thereof, an habit or disposition of mind, whereby they are made fit vessels, both for the receipt and delivery of whatsoever spiritual perfection. Hooker.
5. Reception; welcome.
The same words in my lady Philoclea's mouth might have had a better grace, and perchance have found a gentler receipt. Sidney.
Jove requite,
And all th' immortal Gods, with that delight
Thou most desir'st, thy kind receite of me;
Of friend, to humane hospitality. Chapman.
6. [from recipe.] Prescription of ingredients for any composition.
On 's bed of death
Many receipts he gave me, chiefly one
Of his old experience th' only darling. Shakspeare.
I'll teach him a receipt to make Words that weep, and tears that speak. Cowley.

REC

That Medea could make old men young again, was nothing else, but that, from knowledge of simples, she had a receipt to make white hair black. Brown.
Wife leeches will not vain receipts obtrude,
While growing pains pronounce the humours crude. Dryden.
Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made. Pope.
Scribonius found the receipt in a letter wrote to Tiberius, and was never able to procure the receipt during the emperor's life. Arbutnot.
RECEIVABLE. adj. [recevable, French;
from receive.] Capable of being received. Diët.
To RECEIVE. v. a. [recevoir, French;
recipio, Latin.]
1. To take or obtain any thing as due.
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receive 't in valiant gore. Shaksp.
A certain nobleman went into a far country, to receive for himself a kingdom, and return. Luke.
2. To take or obtain from another, whether good or evil.
Though I should receive a thousand shekels of silver in mine own hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand against the king's son. 2 Samuel.
What? shall we receive good at the hands of God, and shall we not receive evil? Job.
To them hast thou poured a drink-offering?
Should I receive comfort in these? Isaiah.
He that doeth wrong, shall receive for the wrong done; and there is no respect of persons. Colossians.
Put all in writing that thou givest out, and receivest in. Ecclesiasticus.
They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren; received no laws from one another, but lived separately. Locke.
3. To take any thing communicated.
Draw general conclusions from every particular they meet with: these make little true benefit of history: nay, being of forward and active spirits, receive more harm by it. Locke.
The idea of solidity we receive by our touch.
Locke.
The same inability will every one find, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received in by his senses, or by reflection.
Locke.
To conceive the ideas we receive from sensation,
consider them, in reference to the different ways, whereby they make their approaches to our minds.
Locke.
4. To embrace intellectually.
We have set it down as a law, to examine things to the bottom, and not to receive upon credit, or reject upon improbabilities. Bacon.
In an equal indifferency for all truth; I mean the receiving it, in the love of it, as truth; and in the examination of our principles, and not receiving any for such, till we are fully convinced of their certainty, consists the freedom of the understanding.
Locke.
5. To allow.
Long received custom forbidding them to do as they did, there was no excuse to justify their act;
unless, in the scripture, they could shew some law that did licence them thus to break a received custom. Hooker.
Will it not be receiv'd
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,
And us'd their very daggers, that they have don't?
—Who dares receive it other? Shakspeare.
Left any should think that any thing in this number eight creates the diapason: this computation of eight is rather a thing received, than any true computation. Bacon.
6. To admit.
When they came to Jerusalem, they were received of the church. Acts.
Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. Psalms.
Let her be shut out from the camp seven days,
and after that received in again. Numbers.
Free converse with persons of different sects will enlarge our charity towards others, and incline us to receive them into all the degrees of unity and affection, which the word of God requires. Watts.

7. To take as into a vessel.
He was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. AEs.
8. To take into a place or state.
After the Lord had spoken, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. Mark.
9. To conceive in the mind; to take intellectually.
To one of your receiving,
Enough is shewn. Shakspeare.
10. To entertain as a guest.
Abundance fit to honour, and receive
Our heav'nly stranger. Milton.
- RECEIVEDNESS. n. f. [from received.]
General allowance.
Others will, upon account of the receivedness of the proposed opinion, think it rather worth to be examined, than acquiesced in. Boyle.
- RECEIVER. n. f. [receveur, Fr. from receive.]
1. One to whom any thing is communicated by another.
All the learnings that his time could make him receiver of, he took as we do air. Shakspeare.
She from whose influence all impression came,
But by receivers impotencies lame. Donne.
What was so mercifully designed, might have been improved by the humble and diligent receivers unto their greatest advantages. Hammond.
2. One to whom any thing is given or paid.
In all works of liberality, something more is to be considered, besides the occasion of the givers; and that is the occasion of the receivers. Spratt.
Gratitude is a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense, and an outward acknowledgement of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, as the occasion of the doer shall require, and the abilities of the receiver extend to. South.
If one third of the money in trade were locked up, land-holders must receive one third less for their goods; a less quantity of money by one third being to be distributed amongst an equal number of receivers. Locke.
Wood's halfpence will be offered for six a penny, and the necessary receivers will be losers of two thirds in their pay. Swift.
3. An officer appointed to receive publick money.
There is a receiver, who alone handleth the monies. Bacon.
4. One who partakes of the blessed sacrament.
The signification and sense of the sacrament dispose the spirit of the receiver to admit the grace of the spirit of God there consigned. Taylor.
5. One who co-operates with a robber, by taking the goods which he steals.
This is a great cause of the maintenance of thieves, knowing their receivers always ready; for were there no receivers, there would be no thieves. Spenser.
6. The vessel into which spirits are emitted from the still.
These liquors, which the wide receiver fill,
Prepar'd with labour, and refin'd with skill,
Another course to distant parts begin. Blackmore.
Alkaline spirits run in veins down the sides of the receiver in distillations, which will not take fire. Arbutnot.
7. The vessel of the air-pump, out of which the air is drawn, and which therefore receives any body on which experiments are tried.
The air that in exhausted receivers of air pumps is exhaled from minerals, is as true as to elasticity and density or rarefaction, as that we respire in. Bentley.
- RECELEBRATE. v. a. [re and celebrate.] To celebrate anew.
French air and English verse here wedded lie;
Who did this knot compose,
Again hath brought the lilly to the rose;

- And with their chained dance,
Recelebrates the joyful match. Ben Jonson.
- RE'CENCY. n. f. [recens, Lat.] Newness; new state.
A schirrus in its recency, whilst it is in its augment, requireth milder applications than the confirmed one. Wise man.
- RECE'NSION. n. f. [recensio, Lat.] Enumeration; review.
In this recension of monthly flowers, it is to be understood from its first appearing to its final withering. Evlyn.
- RE'CENT. adj. [recens, Latin.]
1. New; not of long existence.
The ancients were of opinion, that those parts, where Egypt now is, were formerly sea, and that a considerable portion of that country was recent, and formed out of the mud discharged into the neighbouring sea by the Nile. Woodward.
2. Late; not antique.
Among all the great and worthy persons, whereof the memory remaineth, either ancient or recent, there is not one that hath been transported to the mad degree of love. Bacon.
3. Fresh; not long dismissed, released, or parted from.
Ulysses moves,
Urg'd on by want, and recent from the storms,
The brackish ouze his manly grace deforms. Pope.
- RE'CENTLY. adv. [from recent.] Newly; freshly.
Those tubes, which are most recently made of fluids, are most flexible and most easily lengthened. Arbutnot.
- RE'CENTNESS. n. f. [from recent.] Newness; freshness.
This inference of the recentness of mankind from the recentness of these apotheoses of gentile deities, seems too weak to bear up this supposition of the novitas humani generis. Hale.
- RECE'PTACLE. n. f. [receptaculum, Lat.] A vessel or place into which any thing is received. This had formerly the accent on the first syllable.
When the sharpness of death was overcome, he then opened heaven as well to believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hooker.
The county of Tipperary, the only county palatine in Ireland, is by abuse of some bad ones made a receptacle to rob the rest of the counties about it. Spenser.
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are packt. Shakspeare.
The eye of the soul, or receptacle of sapience and divine knowledge. Raleigh.
Lest paradise a receptacle prove
To spirits foul, and all my trees their prey. Milton.
Their intelligence, put in at the top of the horn, shall convey it into a little receptacle at the bottom. Addison.
These are conveniences to private persons; instead of being receptacles for the truly poor, they tempt men to pretend poverty, in order to share the advantages. Atterbury.
Though the supply from this great receptacle below be continual and alike to all the globe; yet when it arrives near the surface, where the heat is not so uniform, it is subject to vicissitudes. Woodward.
- RECEPTIBILITY. n. f. [receptus, Lat.] Possibility of receiving.
The peripatetick matter is a pure unactuated power; and this conceited vacuum a mere receptibility. Glanville.
- RE'CEPTARY. n. f. [receptus, Latin.] Thing received. Not in use.
They, which behold the present state of things, cannot condemn our sober enquiries in the doubtful appertenancies of arts and receptaries of philosophy. Brown.

- tion, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, provisions had been superfluous. Brown.
2. The state of being received.
Causes, according still
To the reception of their matter, act;
Not to th' extent of their own sphere. Milton.
3. Admission of any thing communicated.
In some animals, the avenues, provided by nature for the reception of sensations, are few, and the perception, they are received with, obscure and dull. Locke.
4. Readmission.
All hope is lost
Of my reception into grace. Milton.
5. The act of containing.
I cannot survey this world of fluid matter, without thinking on the hand that first poured it out, and made a proper channel for its reception. Addison.
6. Treatment at first coming; welcome; entertainment.
This succession of so many powerful methods being farther prescribed by God, have found so discouraging a reception, that nothing but the violence of storming or battery can pretend to prove successful. Hammond.
Pretending to consult
About the great reception of their king, Thither to come. Milton.
7. Opinion generally admitted.
Philosophers, who have quitted the popular doctrines of their countries, have fallen into as extravagant opinions, as even common reception countenanced. Locke.
8. Recovery. Not in use.
He was right glad of the French king's reception, of those towns from Maximilian. Bacon.
- RECE'PTIVE. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Having the quality of admitting what is communicated.
The soul being, as it is active, perfected by love of that infinite good, shall, as it is receptive, be also perfected with those supernatural passions of joy, peace and delight. Hooker.
To advance the spiritual concerns of all that could in any kind become receptive of the good he meant them, was his unlimited designment and endeavour. Fell.
The pretended first matter is capable of all forms, and the imaginary space is receptive of all bodies. Glanville.
- RECE'PTORY. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Generally or popularly admitted.
Although therein be contained many excellent things, and verified upon his own experience, yet are there many also receptory, and will not endure the test. Brown.
- RECE'SS. n. f. [recessus, Latin.]
1. Retirement; retreat; withdrawing; secession.

To RECHARGE. v. a. [recharger, Fr. re and charge.]

1. To accuse in return.

The fault, that we find with them, is, that they overmuch abridge the church of her power in these things: whereupon they recharge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty, which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.

2. To attack anew.

They charge, recharge, and all along the sea They drive, and squander the huge Belgian fleet. Dryden.

RECHER'T. n. s. Among hunters, a lesson which the huntsman winds on the horn, when the hounds have lost their game, to call them back from pursuing a counterfcent. Bailey.

That a woman conceived me, I thank her; but that I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick, all women shall pardon me. Shakspeare.

RECIDIVATION. n. s. [recidivus, Lat.] Backsliding; falling again.

Our renewed obedience is still most indispensably required, though mixed with much of weakness, frailties, recidivations, to make us capable of pardon. Hammond.

RECIDI'VOUS. adj. [recidivus, Lat.] Subject to fall again.

RE'CIPE. n. s. [recipe, Latin; the term used by physicians, when they direct ingredients.] A medical prescription.

I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth in a kind remove the cause, and answers the physician's first recipe, vomiting and purging; but this would be too harsh. Suckling.

Th' apothecary train is wholly blind, From files a random recipe they take, And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

RECIPIENT. n. s. [recipiens, Latin.]

1. The receiver; that to which any thing is communicated.

Though the images, or whatever else is the cause of sense, may be alike as from the object, yet may the representations be varied according to the nature of the recipient. Glanville.

2. The vessel into which spirits are driven by the still.

The form of sound words, dissolved by chymical preparation, ceases to be nutritive; and after all the labours of the alembick, leaves in the recipient a fretting corrosive. Decay of Piety.

RECIPROCAL. adj. [reciprocus, Lat. reciproque, French.]

1. Acting in vicissitude; alternate.

Corruption is reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two boundaries, and guides to life and death. Bacon.

What if that light, To the terrestrial moon be as a star, Enlight'ning her by day, as she by night, This earth? reciprocal, if land be there, Fields and inhabitants. Milton.

2. Mutual; done by each to each.

Where there's no hope of a reciprocal aid, there can be no reason for the mutual obligation. L'Estr.

In reciprocal duties, the failure on one side justifies not a failure on the other. Clarissa.

3. Mutually interchangeable.

These two rules will render a definition reciprocal with the thing defined; which, in the schools, signifies, that the definition may be used in the place of the thing defined. Watts.

4. In geometry, reciprocal proportion is, when, in four numbers, the fourth number is so much lesser than the second, as the third is greater than the first, and vice versa. Harris.

According to the laws of motion, if the bulk and activity of aliment and medicines are in reciprocal proportion, the effect will be the same. Arbutnot.

RECIPROCALLY. adv. [from reciprocal.] Mutually; interchangeably.

His mind and place Infecting one another reciprocally. Shakspeare.

Make the bodies appear enlightened by the shadows which bound the light, which cause it to repose for some space of time; and reciprocally the shadows may be made sensible by enlightening your ground. Dryden.

If the distance be about the hundredth part of an inch, the water will rise to the height of about an inch; and if the distance be greater or less in any proportion, the height will be reciprocally proportional to the distance very nearly: for the attractive force of the glasses is the same, whether the distance between them be greater or less; and the weight of the water drawn up is the same, if the height of it be reciprocally proportional to the height of the glasses. Newton.

Those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour, as they would do at the same distance in any other situation. Bentley.

RECIPROCALNESS. n. s. [from reciprocal.] Mutual return; alternateness.

The reciprocalness of the injury ought to allay the displeasure at it. Decay of Piety.

To RECK. v. a. [nekan, Saxon.]

1. To care; to heed; to mind; to rate at much; to be in care. Out of use. Reck is still retained in Scotland: it has of before the thing.

Thou's but a lazy loorde, And recks much of thy swinke, That with fond terms and witless word, To bleer mine eyes dost think. Spenser.

Good or bad, What do I reck, fith that he dy'd entire? Spenser.

I reck as little what betideth me, As much I wish all good befortune you. Shakspeare.

With what care lost Went all his fear; of God, or hell, or worse, He reck'd not. Milton.

2. It RECKS. verb impersonal. To care.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not; I fear the dread events that dog them both, Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person Of our unowned sister. Milton.

To RECK. v. a. To heed; to care for.

This son of mine, not recking danger, and neglecting the present good way he was in of doing himself good, came hither to do this kind office to my unspeakable grief. Sidney.

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing, That none but fools would reck. Shakspeare.

Do not you as ungracious parsons do, Who shew the steep and thorny way to heav'n; Yet like unthinking reckless libertines, That in the soft path of dalliance treads, Recks not his own rede. Shakspeare.

RECKLESS. adj. [from reck; neccleap, Sax.] Careless; heedless; mindless; untouched. See RECK. This is written by Dryden, wretchless in the article wretchless: reckless is the most etymological.

It made the king as reckless, as them diligent. Sidney.

I'll after, more to be reveng'd of Eglamour
Than for the love of reckless Silvia. Shakspeare.
He apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality and desperately mortal. Shakspeare.

Next this was drawn the reckless cities flame,
When a strange hell pour'd down from heav'n there came. Cowley.

RECKLESSNESS. n. f. [from reck. This word in the seventeenth article is erroneously written, wretchless.] Carelessness; negligence.

Over many good fortunes began to breed a proud recklessness in them. Sidney.

To RECKON. v. a. [neccan, Saxon; rekenen, Dutch.]

1. To number; to count.

The priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, and it shall be abated. Leviticus.

Numb'ring of his virtues praise,
Death lost the reckoning of his days. Crashaw.

When are questions belonging to all finite existences by us reckoned from some known parts of this fensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out by motions in it? Locke.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods, would as well serve men to reckon their years by, as the motions of the sun. Locke.

I reckoned above two hundred and fifty on the outside of the church, though I only told three fides of it. Addison.

A multitude of cities are reckoned up by the geographers, particularly by Ptolemy. Arbuthnot.

2. To esteem; to account.

Where we cannot be persuaded that the will of God is, we should so far reject the authority of men, as to reckon it nothing. Hooker.

Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables, which men of foreign nations record. Wotton.

For him I reckon not in high estate;
But thee, whose strength, while virtue was her mate, Milton.

Might have subdu'd the earth.
People, young and raw, and soft-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure-price of another man's: but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the baseness of all, they will find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only who made hearts, can unite them. South.

Would the Dutch be content with the military government and revenues, and reckon it among what shall be thought necessary for their barrier?
Swift.

3. To assign in an account.

To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. Romans.

To RECKON. v. n.

1. To compute; to calculate.

We may fairly reckon, that this first age of apostles, with that second generation of many who were their immediate converts, extended to the middle of the second century. Addison.

2. To state an account: it has with before the other party.

We shall not spend a large expence of time,
Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. Shakspeare.

3. To charge to account: with on.

I call posterity
Into the debt, and reckon on her head. Ben Jonson.

4. To pay a penalty: with for before the crime.

If they fail in their bounden duty, they shall reckon for it one day. Sanderson.

5. To call to punishment: it has with.

God suffers the most grievous sins of particular persons to go unpunished in this world, because his justice will have another opportunity to meet and reckon with them. Tillotson.

6. [compter sur, French.] To lay stress or dependance upon.

You reckon upon losing your friends' kindness, when you have sufficiently convinced them, they can never hope for any of yours. Temple.

RECKONER. n. f. [from reckon.] One who computes; one who calculates cost.

Reckoners without their host must reckon twice.
Camden.

RECKONING. n. f. [from reckon.]

Can't thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute

When their swoln bellies shall enlarge their fruit?
Sandys.

3. Accounts of debtor and creditor.

They that know how their own reck'ning goes,
Account not what they have, but what they lose. Daniel.

It is with a man and his conscience, as with one man and another; even reckoning makes lasting friends; and the way to make reckonings even, is to make them often. South.

4. Money charged by an host.

His industry is up stairs and down; his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning. Shakspeare.

When a man's virtues cannot be understood, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room. Shakspeare.

A coin would have a nobler use than to pay a reckoning. Addison.

5. Account taken.

There was no reckoning made with them of the money delivered into their hand. 2 Kings.

6. Esteem; account; estimation.

Beauty, though in as great excellency in yourself as in any, yet you make no further reckoning of it, than of an outward fading benefit nature bestowed. Sidney.

Were they all of as great account as the best among them, with us notwithstanding they ought not to be of such reckoning, that their opinion should cause the laws of the church to give place. Hooker.

A RECKONING-BOOK. n. f. [from reckoning and book.] A book in which money received and expended is set down.

To RECLAIM. v. a. [reclamo, Latin.]

1. To reform; to correct.

He spared not the heads of any mischievous practices, but shewed sharp judgment on them for en-sample sake, that all the meaner sort, which were infected with that evil, might, by terror thereof, be reclaimed and saved. Spenser.

This error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall save more in one summer, than Themison destroyed in any autumn. Brown.

Reclaim your wife from strolling up and down
To all affizes. Dryden.

'Tis the intention of providence, in all the various expressions of his goodness, to reclaim mankind, and to engage their obedience. Rogers.

The penal laws in being against papists have been found ineffectual, and rather confirm than reclaim men from their errors. Swift.

2. [reclamer, French.] To reduce to the state desired.

It was for him to hasten to let his people see that he meant to govern by law, howsoever he came in by the sword; and fit also to reclaim them, to know him for their king, whom they had so lately talked of as an enemy. Bacon.

Much labour is requir'd in trees, to tame
Their wild disorder, and in ranks reclaim. Dryden.

Minds she the dangers of the Lycian coast?
Or is her tow'ring flight reclaim'd,
By seas from Icarus's downfal nam'd?
Vain is the call, and useless the advice. Prior.

3. To recall; to cry out against.

The head-strong horses hurried Octavius, the trembling charioteer, along, and were deaf to his reclaiming them. Dryden.

Oh tyrant love!

Wisdom and wit in vain reclaim,
And arts but soften us to feel thy flame. Pope.

4. To tame.

Upon his fist he bore
An eagle well reclaim'd. Dryden.

Are not hawks brought to the hand, and lions, tygers, and bears reclaimed by good usage? L'Estrange.

RECLAIMANT. n. f. [from reclaim.] Contradicter.

In the year 325, as is well known, the Arian doctrines were proscribed, and anathematized in the famous council of Nice, consisting of 318 bishops, very unanimous in their resolutions, excepting a few reclaimants. Waterland.

To RECLINE. v. a. [reclino Lat. recliner,
Fr.] To lean back; to lean sidewise.

The mother
Reclin'd her dying head upon his breast. Dryden.

While thus she rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The purling streams that through the meadows
stray'd,

In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid. Addison.

To RECLINE. v. n. To rest; to repose;

to lean.
RECLINE. adj. [reclinis, Lat.] In a leaning posture.

They sat recline.
On the soft downy bank, damask'd with flow'rs. Milton.

To RECLOSE. v. a. [re and close.] To close again.

The silver ring she pull'd, the door reclot'd;
The bolt, obedient to the silken cord,
To the strong staple's inmost depth restor'd, Secur'd the valves. Pope.

To RECLUDE. v. a. [recludo, Latin.] To open.

The ingredients absorb the intestinal superfluities, reclude opipulations, and mundify the blood. Harvey.

RECLUSE. adj. [reclus, Fr. reclusus, Lat.]
Shut up; retired.

This must be the inference of a mere contemplative; a recluse that converses only with his own meditations. Decay of Piety.

The nymphs
Melissas, sacred and recluse to Ceres, Pour streams select, and purity of waters. Prior.

I all the live-long day
Consume in meditation deep, recluse
From human converse. Philips.

RECLUSE. n. f. A retired person.

It seems you have not lived such an obstinate recluse from the disputes and transactions of men. Hammond.

RECOAGULATION. n. f. [re and coagulation.] Second coagulation.

This salt, dissolved in a convenient quantity of water, does upon its recoagulation dispose of the aqueous particles among its own saline ones, and shoot into crystals. Bayle.

RECOGNISANCE. n. f. [recognisance, Fr.]

1. Acknowledgment of person or thing.

2. Badge.

Apparent it is, that all men are either christians or not; if by external profession they be christians, then are they of the visible church of Christ; and christians by external profession they are all whose mark of recognizance hath in it those things mentioned, yet although they be impious idolators and wicked hereticks. Hooker.

She did gratify his amorous works,
With that recognizance and pledge of love,
Which I first gave her; an handkerchief. Shakspeare.

3. A bond of record testifying the recognifor to owe unto the recognisee a certain sum of money; and is acknowledged in some court of record; and those that are mere recognisances are not sealed but enrolled: it is also used for the verdict of the twelve men empannelled upon an assize. Corwell.

REC

The English should not marry with any Irish, unless bound by recognisance with sureties, to continue loyal. Davies.

TO RECOGNISE. v. a. [recognosco, Lat.]

1. To acknowledge; to recover and avow knowledge of any person or thing.

He brought several of them, even under their own hands, to recognize their sense of their undue procedure used by them unto him. Fell.

The British cannon formidably roars,
While starting from his oozy bed,
Th' asserted ocean rears his reverend head,
To view and recognise his ancient lord. Dryden.

Then first he recognis'd th' æthereal guest,
Wonder and joy alternate fire his breast. Pope.

Speak, vassal, recognize thy sov'reign queen:
Hast thou ne'er seen me? know'st thou not me seen? Harte.

2. To review; to re-examine.

However their causes speed in your tribunals,
Christ will recognize them at a greater. South.

RECOGNISEE. n. f. He in whose favour the bond is drawn.

RECOGNISOR. n. f. He who gives the recognisance.

RECOGNITION. n. f. [recognitio, Latin.]

1. Review; renovation of knowledge.

The virtues of some being thought expedient to be annually had in remembrance, brought in a fourth kind of public reading, whereby the lives of such faints had, at the time of their yearly memorials, solemn recognition in the church of God. Hooker.

2. Knowledge confessed.

Every species of fancy hath three modes: recognition of a thing, as present; memory of it, as past; and foresight of it, as to come. Grew.

3. Acknowledgment; memorial.

The Israelites in Moses' days were redeemed out of Egypt; in memory and recognition whereof they were commanded to observe the weekly sabbath. White.

If the recognition or acknowledgment of a final concord, upon any writ of covenant finally, be taken by justice of assize, and the yearly value of those lands be declared by affidavit made before the same justice; then is the recognition and value signed with the hand-writing of that justice. Bacon.

TO RECOIL. v. n. [reculer, French.]

1. To rush back in consequence of resistance, which cannot be overcome by the force impressed.

The very thought of my revenges that way
Recoil upon me; in himself too mighty. Shakspeare.

Revenge, at first though sweet,
Bitter ere long, back on itself recoils. Milton.

Amazement seiz'd
All th' host of heav'n, back they recoil'd, afraid
At first. Milton.

Evil on itself shall back recoil. Milton.

Who in deep mines for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'ercharg'd, breaks, misses, or recoils. Denham.

My hand's so soft, his heart so hard,
The blow recoils, and hurts me while I strike! Dryden.

Whatever violence may be offered to nature, by endeavouring to reason men into a contrary persuasion, nature will still recoil, and at last return to itself. Tillotson.

2. To fall back.

Ye both forewari'd be; therefore a while
I read you rest, and to your bowers recoil. Spenser.

Ten paces huge
He back recoil'd; the tenth on bended knee,
His massy spear upstay'd. Milton.

The pow'rs of Troy
With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not theirs a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattel'd men. Dryden.

RECTANGLE. n. f. [rectangle, French; rectangulus, Latin.] A figure which has one angle or more of ninety-degrees.

If all Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Brown.

The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind. Locke.

RECTANGULAR. adj. [rectangulaire, Fr. rectus and angulus, Lat.] Right angled; having angles of ninety degrees.

Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Wotton.

RECTANGULARLY. adv. [from rectangu- lar.] With right angles.

At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly;
but approaching northward toward the tropic, it will regard the stone obliquely. Brown.

RECTIFIABLE. adj. [from rectify.] Ca- pable to be set right.

The natural heat of the parts being insufficient for a perfect and thorough digestion, the errors of one concoction are not rectifiable by another. Brown.

RECTIFICATION. n. f. [rectification, Fr. from rectify.]

1. The act of setting right what is wrong.

It behoved the deity to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Forbes.

2. In chymistry, rectification is drawing any thing over again by distillation, to make it yet higher or finer. Quincy.

At the first rectification of some spirit of salt in a retort, a single pound afforded no less than six ounces of phlegm. Boyle.

To RECTIFY. v. a. [rectifier, French; rectus and facio, Latin.]

1. To make right; to reform; to redress.

That wherein unsouder times have done amiss,
the better ages ensuing must rectify as they may.
Hooker.

It shall be bootless

That longer you defer the court, as well

For your own quiet, as to rectify

What is unsettled in the king, Shakspeare.

Where a long course of piety has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full might.
South.

The substance of this theory I mainly depend on,
being willing to suppose that many particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.

If those men of parts, who have been employed in vitiating the age, had endeavoured to rectify and amend it, they needed not have sacrificed their good sense to their fame. Addison.

The false judgments he made of things are owned;
and the methods pointed out by which he rectified
them. Atterbury.

2. To exalt and improve by repeated distil- lation.

The skin hath been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with rectified spirit of wine in a cylindrical glass. Grew.

RECTILINEAR. } adj. [rectus and linea, RECTILINEOUS. } Lat.] Consisting of right lines.

There are only three rectilinear and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and inordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal. Ray.

This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends. Newton.

The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines; and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectili-near way, it will never return into the same rectili-near way, unless perhaps by very great accident.
Newton.

RECTITUDE. n. f. [rectitude, Fr. from rectus, Lat.]

1. Straightness; not curvity.

2. Rightness; uprightness; freedom from moral curvity or obliquity.

Faith and repentance, together with the rectitude of their present engagement, would fully prepare them for a better life. King Charles.

Calm the disorders of thy mind, by reflecting on the wisdom, equity and absolute rectitude of all his proceedings. Atterbury.

RECTOR. n. f. [recteur, Fr. rector; Lat.]

1. Ruler; lord; governour.

God is the supreme rector of the world, and of all those subordinate parts thereof. Hale.

When a rector of an university of scholars is chosen by the corporation or university, the election ought to be confirmed by the superior of such university.
Ayliffe.

2. Parson of an unimpropriated parish.

RECTORSHIP. n. f. [rectorat, Fr. from rector.] The rank or office of rector.

Had your bodies

No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry
Against the rectorship of judgment? Shakspeare.

RECTORY. n. f. [rectorerie, Fr. from rector.]

A rectory or parsonage is a spiritual living, composed of land, tithe and other oblations of the people, separate or dedicate to God in any congregation for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governor or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed. Spelman.

RECUBATION. n. f. [recubo, Latin.] The act of lying or leaning.

Whereas our translation renders it fitting, it cannot have that illation, for the French and Italian translations express neither position of session or recubation. Brown.

RECULE, for RECOIL. [reculer, French.]

Spenser.

RECUMBENCY. n. f. [from recumbent.]

1. The posture of lying or leaning.

In that memorable shew of Germanicus, twelve elephants danced unto the sound of music, and after laid them down in tricliniums, or places of festival recumbency. Brown.

2. Rest; repose.

When the mind has been once habituated to this lazy recumbency and satisfaction on the obvious surface of things, it is in danger to rest satisfied there.
Locke.

RECUMBENT. adj. [recumbens, Latin.]

Lying; leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or more properly accu-bent, posture in eating was introduced after the first Punic war. Arubnot.

To RECURE. v. n. [recurro, Latin.]

1. To come back to the thought; to revive in the mind.

The idea, I have once had, will be unchangeably the same, as long as it *recur*s the same in my memory. Locke.

In this life the thoughts of God and a future state often offer themselves to us; they often spring up in our minds, and when expelled, recur again. Calamy.

A line of the golden verses of the Pythagoreans recurring on the memory, hath often guarded youth from a temptation to vice. Watts.

When any word has been used to signify an idea, that old idea will recur in the mind when the word is heard. Watts.

2. [recourir, Fr.] To have recourse to; to take refuge in.

If to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum stans of the schools, they will thereby very little help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

The second cause we know, but trouble not ourselves to recur to the first. Wake.

To RECURE. v. a. [re and cure.] To recover from sickness or labour. Not in use.

Through wise handling and fair governance,
I him recured to a better will,
Purged from drugs of foul intemperance. Spenser.

TO RECUSE. v. n. [recuser, Fr. recuso, Lat.] To refuse. A juridical word.

The humility, as well of understanding as manners of the fathers, will not let them be troubled, when they are recused as judges. Digby.

A judge may proceed notwithstanding my appeal, unless I recuse him as a suspected judge. Ayliffe.

RED. adj. [from the old Saxon, reð; rhud, Welsh. As the town of Hertford, Mr. Camden, in his Britannia, noteth, first was called, by the Saxons, Herudford, the rud ford, or the red ford or water; high Dutch, rot; from the Gr. ῥεῦδος; French, rouge; Italian, rubro; from the Latin, ruber. Peacham.] Of the colour of blood, of one of the primitive colours, which is subdivided into many; as scarlet, vermilion, crimson.

Look I so pale?

—Ay, and no man in the presence,

But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks. Shaksp.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,

To prove whose blood is reddest. Shaksp.

His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth

white with milk. Genesis.

His eyes dart forth red flames which scare the night,

And with worse fires the trembling ghosts affright. Cowley.

Th' angelick squadron turn'd fiery red. Milton.

If red lead and white paper be placed in the red light of the coloured spectrum, made in a dark chamber by the refraction of a prism, the paper will appear more lucid than the red lead, and therefore reflects the red making rays more copiously than red lead doth. Newton's Opticks.

The sixth red was at first of a very fair and lively scarlet, and soon after of a brighter colour, being very pure and brisk, and the best of all the reds. Newton.

Why heavenly truth,

And moderation fair, were the red marks

Of superstition's scourge. Thomson.

Permit our ships a shelter on your shoars,
Refuted from your woods with planks and oars.

Dryden.

TO REFLECT. v. a. [reflektir, Fr. refleto, Lat.] To throw back.

We, his gather'd beams
Reflected, may with matter sore foment. Milton.
Bodies close together reflect their own colour. Dryden.

TO REFLECT. v. n.

1. To throw back light.

In dead men's skulls, and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakespeare.

2. To bend back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, and never reflects in an angle, nor bends in a circle, which is a continual reflection, unless either by some external impulse, or by an intrinsic principle of gravity. Bentley.

3. To throw back the thoughts upon the past or on themselves.

The imagination casts thoughts in our way, and forces the understanding to reflect upon them. Duppa.

In every action reflect upon the end; and in your undertaking it, consider why you do it. Taylor.
Who faith, who could such ill events expect?
With shame on his own counsels doth reflect. Denham.

When men are grown up, and reflect on their own minds, they cannot find any thing more ancient there, than those opinions which were taught them before their memory began to keep a register of their actions. Locke.

It is hard, that any part of my land should be settled upon one who has used me so ill; and yet I could not see a sprig of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I should reflect upon her and her severity. Spektor.

Let the king dismiss his woes,
Reflecting on her fair renown;
And take the cypress from his brows,
To put his wonted laurels on. Prior.

4. To consider attentively.

Into myself my reason's eye I turn'd;
And as I much reflected, much I mourn'd. Prior.

5. To throw reproach or censure.

Neither do I reflect in the least upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Swift.

6. To bring reproach.

Errors of wives reflect on husbands still. Dryden.

REFLECTENT. adj. [reflectens, Lat.] Bending back; flying back.

The ray descendent, and the ray reflectent, flying with so great a speed, that the air between them cannot take a formal play any way, before the beams of the light be on both sides of it; it follows, that, according to the nature of humid things, it must first only swell. Digby.

REFLECTION. n. s. [from reflect: thence I think reflexion less proper: reflexion, Fr. reflexus, Latin.]

1. The act of throwing back.

The eye sees not itself,
But by reflection from other things. Shakespeare.
If the sun's light consisted but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impossible to produce any new by reflections or refractions. Cheyne.

2. The act of bending back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse. Bentley.

3. That which is reflected.

She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. Shakespeare.
As the sun in water we can bear,
Yet not the sun, but his reflection there;

So let us view her here, in what she was,
And take her image in the watry glass. Dryden.

4. Thought thrown back upon the past, or the absent, on itself.

The three first parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off those melancholy reflections, which the sense of age, infirmity, and death may give them. Denham.

This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope; and now began
To make reflection on the unhappy man. Dryden.

Job's reflections on his once flourishing estate, did at the same time afflict and encourage him. Atterb.
What wounding reproaches of soul must he feel, from the reflections on his own ingratitude. Rogers.

5. The action of the mind upon itself.

Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got. Locke.

6. Attentive consideration.

This delight grows and improves under thought and reflection; and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind; at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations. South.

7. Censure.

He dy'd; and oh! may no reflection shed
Its pois'nous venom on the royal dead. Prior.

REFLECTIVE. adj. [from reflect.]

1. Throwing back images.

When the weary king gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so shone still in his reflective light. Dryden.
In the reflective stream the sighing bride,
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd shall hide
Her pensive head. Prior.

2. Considering things past; considering the operations of the mind.

Forc'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess. Prior.

REFLECTOR. n. s. [from reflect.] Considerer.

There is scarce any thing that nature has made, or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an aspiring meditation. Boyle.

REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Latin.] Directed backward.

The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my sense; I see the object, and I perceive that I see it. Hale.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them do evince by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blinder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

REFLEX. n. s. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection.

There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflex of their understandings upon themselves. Hocker.

I'll say yon gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shaksp.

REFLEXIBILITY. n. s. [from reflexible.]

The quality of being reflexible.

Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall; and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily. Newton.

REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Lat.]

Capable to be thrown back.

Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible. Cheyne.

REFLEXIVE. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Having respect to something past.

That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with. Hammond.

REFLEXIVELY. adv. [from reflexive.] In a backward direction.

Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in regard of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also in respect of what may rebound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

REFLOAT. n. s. [re and float.] Ebb; reflux.

The main float and refloat of the sea, is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.

REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Lat.] Running back; flowing back.

The liver receives the refluent blood almost from all the parts of the abdomen. Arbuthnot.

Tell, by what paths,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluent rivers, and the land repays. Blackmore.

REFLUX. n. s. [reflux, Fr. refluxus, Lat.] Backward course of water.

Besides
Mine own that 'bide upon me, all from me
Shall with a fierce reflux on me redound. Milton.
The variety of the flux and reflux of Euripus, or whether the same do ebb and flow seven times a day, is incontrovertible. Brown.

REFOCILLATION. n. s. [refocillo, Lat.] Restoration of strength by refreshment.

TO REFORM. v. a. [reforma, Lat. reformer, Fr.] To change from worse to better.

A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence all dregs of popery. Hooker.

Seat worthier of Gods, was built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton.

May no such storm
Fall on our times, where ruin must reform. Denham.
Now low'ring looks presage approaching storms,
And now prevailing love her face reforms. Dryden.
One cannot attempt the perfect reforming the languages of the world, without rendering himself ridiculous. Locke.

The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt an age; but that of a good one will not reform it. Swift.

TO REFORM. v. n. To pass by change from worse to better.

Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in this conflict? or did it give him occasion of reforming in this point? Atterbury.

REFORM. n. s. [Fr.] Reformation.

REFORMATION. n. s. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]

1. Change from worse to better: commonly used of human manners.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;
Nor ever Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his feat, as in this king. Shakespeare.

Satire lashes vice into reformation. Dryden.
The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners, with that sudden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in the lives of the most profligate. Addison.

2. [By way of eminence.] The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.

The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders. Atterbury.

REFORMER. n. s. [from reform.]

1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.

Publick reformers had need first practice that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others. King Charles.

The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home! Spratt.

It was honour enough, to behold the English churches, reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers. South.

2. One of those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations.

Our first reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.

To REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Latin.]

To break the natural course of rays.

If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted. Cheyne.

Rays of light are urged by the refracting media. Cheyne.

Refracted from yon eastern cloud,

The grand ethereal bow shoots up. Thomson.

REFRACTION. n. f. [refraction, Fr.]

Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have passed on in, had not the density of the medium turned it aside. Harris.

Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton.

REFRACTIVE. adj. [from refract.] Having the power of refraction.

Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton.

REFRACTORINESS. n. f. [from refractory.]

Sullen obstinacy.

I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. K. Charles.

Great complaint was made by the presbyterian gang, of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's order. Saunderson.

REFRACTORY. adj. [refractaire, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakspeare on the second.]

Obstinate; perverse; contumacious.

There is a law in each well-ordered nation,

To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. Shakspeare.

A rough hewn seaman, being brought before a wife justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, inasmuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon.

Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory sullenness. King Charles.

Refractory mortal! if thou wilt not trust thy friends, take what follows; know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbutnot.

These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and sullen; and therefore, like men of the same tempers, must be banged and buffeted into reason. Bentley.

REFRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.]

Capable of refutation and conviction.

To REFRAIN. v. a. [refrener, Fr. re and frænum, Lat.] To hold back; to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not still silence; refrain not thyself. Psalms.

My son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Proverbs.

Nor from the holy one of heav'n Refrain'd his tongue. Milton.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain, Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pope.

To REFRAIN. v. n. To forbear; to abstain; to spare.

In what place, or upon what consideration soever it be, they do it, were it in their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly refrain to do it. Hooker.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Isaiab.

That they fed not on flesh, at least the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, because they refrained therefrom some time after. Brown.

REFRANGIBILITY. n. f. [from refrangibile.]

Refrangibility of the rays of light, is their disposition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRANGIBLE. adj. [re and frango, Latin.]

As some rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turned out of their course, in passing from one medium to another; it follows, that after such refraction, they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed. Locke.

REFRACTION. n. f. [re and fræno, Lat.]

The act of restraining.

To REFRESH. v. a. [refraischer, French; refrigero, Latin.]

1. To recreate; to relieve after pain, fatigue, or want.

Service shall with steeld sinews toil;

And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakspeare.

Musick was ordained to refresh the mind of man

After his studies, or his usual pain. Shakspeare.

He was in no danger to be overtaken; so that he was content to refresh his men. Clarendon.

His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing, neither interrupted with the lashes of a guilty mind, nor the aches of a crazy body. South.

If you would have trees to thrive, take care that no plants be near them, which may deprive them of nourishment, or hinder refreshings and helps that they might receive. Mortimer.

2. To improve by new touches any thing impaired.

The rest refresh the scaly snakes, that fold

The shield of Pallas, and renew their gold. Dryden.

3. To refrigerate; to cool.

A dew coming after heat refresheth. Ecclesiasticus.

REFRESH. n. f. [from refresh.] That which refreshes.

The kind refresher of the summer heats. Thomson.

REFRESHMENT. n. f. [from refresh.]

1. Relief after pain, want, or fatigue.

2. That which gives relief; as food, rest.

He was full of agony and horror upon the approach of a dismal death, and so had most need of the refreshments of society, and the friendly assistances of his disciples. South.

Such honest refreshments and comforts of life, our christian liberty has made it lawful for us to use. Spratt.

REFRE'T. n. f. The burden of a song. DiD.

REFRIGERANT. adj. [refrigerant, Fr. from refrigerate.] Cooling; mitigating heat.

In the cure of gangrenes, you must beware of dry heat, and resort to things that are refrigerant, with an inward warmth and virtue of cherishing. Bacon.

If it arise from an external cause, apply refrigerants, without any preceding evacuation. Wijeman.

To REFRIGERATE. v. a. [refrigero, re and frigus, Latin.] To cool.

The great breezes, which the motion of the air in great circles, such as the girdle of the world produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore in those parts noon is nothing so hot, when the breezes are great, as about ten of the clock in the forenoon. Bacon.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatory, or somewhat equinoxially, though in a lesser degree, they discover some verticity. Brown.

REFRIGERATION. n. f. [refrigeratio, Lat. refrigeration, French.] The act of cooling; the state of being cooled.

Divers do strut; the cause may be the refrigeration of the tongue, whereby it is less apt to move. Bacon.

If the mere refrigeration of the air would fit it for breathing, this might be somewhat helped with bellows. Wilkins.

REFRIGERATIVE. } adj. [refrigeratif, French; refrigeratorius, Latin.] Cooling; having the power to cool.

REFRIGERATORY. n. f.

1. That part of a distilling vessel that is placed about the head of a still, and filled with water to cool the condensing vapours; but this is now generally done by a worm or spiral pipe, turning through a tub of cold water. Quincy.

2. Any thing internally cooling.

A delicate wine, and a durable refrigeratory. Mortimer.

REFRIGERIUM. n. f. [Latin.] Cool refreshment; refrigeration.

It must be acknowledged, the ancients have talked much of annual refrigeriums, respites, or intervals of punishment to the damned; as particularly on the festivals. South.

REST. part. pret. of reave.

1. Deprived; taken away. Obsolete.

Thus we well left, he better rest,

In heaven to take his place,

That by like life and death, at last,

We may obtain like grace. Ascham.

I, in a desperate bay of death,

Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling rest,

Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. Shakspeare.

Another ship had seiz'd on us,

And would have rest the fishers of their prey. Shak.

Our dying hero, from the continent

Ravish'd whole towns, and forts from Spaniards rest,

As his last legacy to Britain left. Waller.

2. [pret. of reave.] Took away. Obsolete.

So 'twixt them both, they not a lamkin left,

And when lambs fail'd, the old sheeps lives they rest. Spenser.

About his shoulders broad he threw

An airy hide of some wild beast, whom he

In savage forest by adventure slew,

And rest the spoil his ornament to be. Spenser.

REFUGE. n. f. [refuge, French; refugium, Latin.]

1. Shelter from any danger or distress; protection.

Rocks, dens, and caves! but I in none of these

Find place or refuge. Milton.

The young vipers supposed to break through the belly of the dam, will, upon any fright, for protection run into it: for then the old one receives them in at her mouth, which way, the fright being past, they will return again; which is a peculiar way of refuge. Brown.

Those, who take refuge in a multitude, have an Arian council to answer for. Atterbury.

2. That which gives shelter or protection.

The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed; a refuge in times of trouble. Psalms.

They shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood. Job.

Fair majesty, the refuge and redress

Of those whom fate pursues. Dryden.

3. Expedient in distress.

This last old man,

Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,

Lov'd me above the measure of a father:

Their latest refuge was to send him. Shakspeare.

4. Expedient in general.

Light must be supplied, among graceful refuges, by terracing any story in danger of darkness. Wotton.

To REFUGE. v. a. [refugier, French; from the noun.] To shelter; to protect.

Silly beggars,

Who sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame,

That many have, and others must, sit there. Shak.

Dreads the vengeance of her injur'd lord;

Ev'n by those gods, who refus'd her, abhor'd.

Dryden.

REF

REFUGEE n. f. [refugie, French.] One who flies to shelter or protection.

Poor refugees, at first they purchase here; And soon as denizen'd, they domineer. Dryden.
This is become more necessary in some of their governments, since so many refugees settled among them. Addison.

less; negligent; inattentive.

He liketh it to fall into mischance,
That is regardless of his governance. Spenser.

Regardless of the blis wherein he sat,
Second to thee, offered himself to die
For man's offence. Milton.

We must learn to be deaf and regardless of other things, besides the present subject of our meditation.
Watts.

REGENCY. n. s. [from regent.]

1. Authority; government.

As Christ took manhood, that by it he might be capable of death, whereunto he humbleth himself;
so because manhood is the proper subject of compassion and feeling pity, which maketh the scepter of Christ's regency even in the kingdom of heaven amiable. Hooker.

Men have knowledge and strength to fit them for action: women affection, for their better compliance; and herewith beauty to compensate their subjection, by giving them an equivalent regency over men. Grew.

2. Vicarious government.

This great minister, finding the regency shaken by the faction of so many great ones within, and awed by the terror of the Spanish greatness without, durst begin a war. Temple.

3. The district governed by a vicegerent.

Regions they pass'd, the mighty regencies
Of seraphim. Milton.

4. Those collectively to whom vicarious regality is intrusted: as, the regency transacted affairs in the king's absence.

TO REGENERATE. v. a. [regenero,
Latin.]

1. To reproduce; to produce anew.

Albeit the son of this earl of Desmond, who lost his head, were restored to the earldom; yet could not the king's grace regenerate obedience in that degenerate house, but it grew rather more wild.
Davies.

Through all the soil a genial ferment spreads,
Regenerates the plants, and new adorns the meads.
Blackmore.

An alkali, poured to that which is mixed with an acid, raiseth an effervescence, at the cessation of which, the salts, of which the acid is composed, will be regenerated. Arbutnot.

2. To make to be born anew; to renew by
Vol. II.

change of carnal nature to a christian life.

No sooner was a convert initiated, but by an easy figure he became a new man, and both acted and looked upon himself as one regenerated, and born a second time into another state of existence. Addis.

REGENERATE. adj. [regeneratus, Latin.]

1. Reproduced.

Thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Doth with a twofold vigour lift me up
To reach at victory. Shakspeare.

2. Born anew by grace to a christian life.

For from the mercy-seat above,
Prevenient grace descending, had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh Regenerate grow instead. Milton.

If you fulfil this resolution, though you fall sometimes by infirmity; nay, though you should fall into some greater act, even of deliberate sin, which you presently retract by confession and amendment, you are nevertheless in a regenerate estate, you live the life of a christian here, and shall inherit the reward that is promised to such in a glorious immortality hereafter. Wake.

REGENERATENESS. n. s. [from regenerate.] The state of being regenerate.

REGENERATION. n. s. [regeneration, Fr.]
New birth; birth by grace from carnal affections to a christian life.

He saved us by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost. Titus.

REGENT. adj. [regent, French; regens,
Latin.]

1. Governing; ruling.

The operations of human life flow not from the corporeal moles, but from some other active regent principle that resides in the body, or governs it, which we call the soul. Hale.

2. Exercising vicarious authority.

He together calls the regent pow'rs
Under him regent. Milton.

REGENT. n. s.

1. Governour; ruler.

Now for once beguill'd
Uriel, though regent of the sun, and held
The sharpest-sighted spirit of all in heav'n. Milton.

Neither of these are any impediment, because the regent thereof is of an infinite immensity. Hale.

But let a heifer with gilt horns be led
To Juno, regent of the marriage bed. Dryden.

2. One invested with vicarious royalty.

Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king. Shaksp.

tion*.] The act of sprouting again.

REGIBLE. adj. Governable. Diſt.

REGICIDE. n. s. [regicida, Latin.]

1. Murderer of his king.

I through the mazes of the bloody field,
Hunted your sacred life; which that I miss'd
Was the propitious error of my fate,
Not of my soul; my soul's a regicide. Dryden.

2. [regicidium, Latin.] Murder of his king.

Were it not for this amulet, how were it possible for any to think they may venture upon perjury, sacrilege, murder, regicide, without impeachment to their saintship? Decay of Piety.

Did fate or we, when great Atrides dy'd,
Urge the bold traitor to the regicide? Pope.

REGIMEN. n. s. [Latin.] That care in diet and living, that is suitable to every particular course of medicine, or state of body.

Yet should some neighbour feel a pain,
Just in the parts where I complain,

How many a message would he send?

What hearty prayers, that I should mend?

Enquire what regimen I kept,

What gave me ease, and how I slept? Swift.

REGIMENT. n. s. [regiment, old French.]

1. Established government; polity; mode of rule. Not in use.

We all make complaint of the iniquity of our times, not unjustly, for the days are evil; but compare them with those times wherein there were no civil societies, with those times wherein there was as yet no manner of publick regiment established, and we have surely good cause to think, that God hath blessed us exceedingly. Hooker.

The corruption of our nature being presupposed, we may not deny, but that the law of nature doth now require of necessity some kind of regiment.
Hooker.

They utterly damn their own consistorian regiment, for the same can neither be proved by any literal texts of holy scripture, nor yet by necessary inference out of scripture. White.

2. Rule; authority. Not in use.

The regiment of the soul over the body, is the regiment of the more active part over the passive. Hale.

3. [regiment, French.] A body of soldiers under one colonel.

Higher to the plain we'll set forth,
In best appointment, all our regiments. Shakspeare.

The elder did whole regiments afford,
The younger brought his conduct and his sword. Waller.

The muse attends thee to the silent shade;
'Tis her's the brave man's latest steps to trace,
Rejudge his acts, and dignify disgrace. Pope.

TO REKINDLE. v. a. [re and kindle.] To set on fire again.

These disappearing, fixed stars were actually extinguished, and would for ever continue so, if not rekindled, and new recruited with heat and light. Cheyne.

Rekindled at the royal charms,
Tumultuous love each beating bosom warms. Pope.

TO RELAPSE. v. n. [relapsus, Lat.]

1. To slip back; to slide or fall back.

2. To fall back into vice or error.

The oftner he hath relapsed, the more significations he ought to give of the truth of his repentance. Taylor.

3. To fall back from a state of recovery to sickness.

He was not well cured, and would have relapsed. Wifeman.

RELAPSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fall into vice or error once forsaken.

This would but lead me to a worse relapse
And heavier fall. Milton.

We see in too frequent instances the relapses of those, who, under the present smart, or the near apprehension of the divine displeasure, have resolved on a religious reformation. Rogers.

2. Regression from a state of recovery to sickness.

It was even as two physicians should take one sick body in hand; of which, the former would purge and keep under the body, the other pamper and strengthen it suddenly; whereof what is to be looked for, but a most dangerous relapse? Spenser.

3. Return to any state. The sense here is somewhat obscure.

Mark a bounding valour in our English;
That being dead like to the bullet's grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shakspeare.

TO RELATE. v. a. [relatus, Lat.]

1. To tell; to recite.

Your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were to add the death of you. Shakspeare.

Here I could frequent
With worship place by place, where he vouchsaf'd Presence divine; and to my sons relate. Milton.

The drama represents to view, what the poem only does relate. Dryden.

2. To vent by words. Unauthorized.

A man were better relate himself to a statue, than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother. Bacon.

3. To ally by kindred.

Avails thee not,
To whom related, or by whom begot;
A heap of dust alone remains. Pope.

4. To bring back; to restore. A latinism.

Spenser.

TO RELATE. v. n. To have reference; to have respect.

All negative or privative words relate to positive ideas, and signify their absence. Locke.

As other courts demanded the execution of persons dead in law, this gave the last orders relating to those dead in reason. Tatler.

RELATER. n. s. [from relate.] Teller; narrator; historian.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any disservice unto their relators. Brown.

Her husband the relater she preferr'd
Before the angel. Milton.

The best English historian, when his style grows antiquated, will be only considered as a tedious relater of facts. Swift.

RELATION. n. s. [relation, Fr. from relate.]

1. Manner of belonging to any person or thing.

Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity and truth;
Just unto all relations known,
A worthy patriot, pious son. Waller.

So far as service imports duty and subjection, all created beings bear the necessary relation of servants to God. South.

Our necessary relations to a family, oblige all to use their reasoning powers upon a thousand occasions. Watts.

Our intercession is made an exercise of love and care for those amongst whom our lot is fallen, or who belong to us in a nearer relation: it then becomes the greatest benefit to ourselves, and produces its best effects in our own hearts. Law.

2. Respect; reference; regard.

I have been importuned to make some observations on this art, in relation to its agreement with poetry. Dryden.

Relation consists in the consideration and comparing one idea with another. Locke.

3. Connexion between one thing and another.

Of the eternal relations and fitnesses of things we know nothing; all that we know of truth and falsehood is, that our constitution determines us in some cases to believe, in others to disbelieve. Beattie.

4. Kindred; alliance of kin.

Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son and brother first were known. Milton.

Be kindred and relation laid aside,
And honour's cause by laws of honour try'd. Dryden.

Are we not to pity and supply the poor, though they have no relation to us? No relation? that cannot be: the gospel styles them all our brethren; nay, they have a nearer relation to us, our fellow-members; and both these from their relation to our Saviour himself, who calls them his brethren. Spratt.

5. Person related by birth or marriage; kinsman; kinswoman.

A she-cousin, of a good family and small fortune, passed months among all her relations. Swift.

Dependants, friends, relations.
Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie. Thomson.

6. Narrative; tale; account; narration; recital of facts.

In an historical relation, we use terms that are most proper. Burnet.

The author of a just fable, must please more than the writer of an historical relation. Dennis.

RELATIVE. adj. [relativus, Lat. relatif, French.]

1. Having relation; respecting.

Not only simple ideas and substances, but modes, are positive beings; though the parts of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Considered not absolutely, but as belonging to, or respecting something else.

Though capable it be not of inherent holiness, yet it is often relative. Holyday.

The ecclesiastical, as well as the civil government, has cause to pursue the same methods of confirming himself; the grounds of government being founded upon the same bottom of nature in both, though the circumstances and relative considerations of the persons may differ. South.

Every thing sustains both an absolute and a relative capacity: an absolute, as it is such a thing, endued with such a nature; and a relative, as it is a part of the universe, and so stands in such relation to the whole. South.

Wholesome and unwholesome are relative, not real qualities. Arbutnot.

3. Particular; positive; close in connection. Not in use.

I'll have grounds
More relative than this. Shakspeare.

RELATIVE. n. f.

1. Relation; kinsman.

'Tis an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer one to perish without reproof. Taylor.

Confining our care either to ourselves and relatives. Fell.

2. Pronoun answering to an antecedent.

Learn the right joining of substantives with adjectives, and the relative with the antecedent. Ascham.

3. Somewhat respecting something else.

When the mind so considers one thing, that it sets it by another, and carries its view from one to the other, this is relation and respect; and the denominations given to positive things, intimating that respect, are relatives. Locke.

RELATIVELY. adv. [from relative.] As it respects something else; not absolutely.

All those things, that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.

These being the greatest good or the greatest evil, either absolutely so in themselves, or relatively so to us; it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Spratt.

Consider the absolute affections of any being as it is in itself, before you consider it relatively, or survey the various relations in which it stands to other beings. Watts.

RELATIVENESS. n. f. [from relative.]

The state of having relation.

To RELAX. v. a. [relaxo, Lat.]

1. To slacken; to make less tense.

The sinews, when the southern wind bloweth, are more relax. Bacon.

Adam, amaz'd,
Astonied stood, and black, while horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

2. To remit; to make less severe or rigorous.

The statute of mortmain was at several times relaxed by the legislature. Swift.

3. To make less attentive or laborious.

Nor praise relax, nor difficulty fright. Vanity of Wishes.

4. To ease; to divert: as, conversation relaxes the student.

5. To open; to loose.

It serv'd not to relax their ferried files. Milton.

To RELAX. v. n. To be mild; to be remiss; to be not rigorous.

If in some regards she chose
To curb poor Paulo in too close;
In others she relax'd again,
And govern'd with a looser rein. Prior.

RELAXATION. n. f. [relaxation, French; relaxatio, Latin.]

1. Diminution of tension; the act of loosening.

Cold sweats are many times mortal; for that they come by a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon.

Many, who live healthy in a dry air, fall into all the diseases that depend upon relaxation in a moist one. Arbutnot.

2. Cessation of restraint.

The sea is not higher than the land, as some imagined the sea stood up on heap higher than the shore; and at the deluge a relaxation being made, it overflowed the land. Burnet.

3. Remission; abatement of rigour.

They childishly granted, by common consent of their whole senate, under their town seal, a relaxation to one Bertelier, whom the eldership had excommunicated. Hooker.

The relaxation of the statute of mortmain, is one of the reasons which gives the bishop terrible apprehensions of popery coming on us. Swift.

4. Remission of attention or application.

As God has not so devoted our bodies to toil, but that he allows us some recreation: so doubtless he indulges the same relaxation to our minds. Government of the Tongue.

There would be no business in solitude, nor proper relaxations in business. Addison.

RELAX. v. n. [relais, Fr.] Horfes on the road to relieve others.

To RELAX. v. a. [relascher, relaxer, French.]

1. To set free from confinement or servitude.

Pilate said, whom will ye that I release unto you? Matthew.

You releas'd his courage, and set free
A valour fatal to the enemy. Dryden.

Why should a reasonable man put it into the power of fortune to make him miserable, when his ancestors have taken care to release him from her? Dryden.

2. To set free from pain.

3. To free from obligation, or penalty.

Too secure, because from death releas'd some days. Milton.

4. To quit; to let go.

Every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour shall release it. Deuteronomy.

He had been base, had he releas'd his right,
For such an empire none but kings should fight. Dryden.

5. To relax; to slacken. Not in use.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be released, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

RELEASE. n. f. [relasche, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Dismission from confinement, servitude, or pain.

2. Relaxation of a penalty.

O fatal search! in which the lab'ring mind,
Still press'd with weight of woe, still hopes to find
A shadow of delight, a dream of peace,
From years of pain, one moment of release. Prior.

3. Remission of a claim.

The king made a great feast, and made a release to the provinces, and gave gifts. Esther.

The king would not have one penny abated, of what had been granted by parliament; because it might encourage other counties to pray the like release or mitigation. Bacon.

4. Acquittance from a debt signed by the creditor.

To RELEGATE. v. a. [releguer, French; relego, Latin.] To banish; to exile.

RELEGATION. n. f. [relegation, Fr. relegatio, Lat.] Exile; judicial banishment.

According to the civil law, the extraordinary punishment of adultery was deportation or relegation. Ayliffe.

To RELENT. v. n. [ralentir, French.]

1. To soften; to grow less rigid or hard; to give.

In some houses, sweetmeats will relent more than in others. Bacon.

In that soft season, when descending show'rs
Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flow'rs;
When opening buds salute the welcome day,
And earth relenting feels the genial ray. Pope.

2. To melt; to grow moist.

Crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they seem to receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.

Salt of tartar, brought to fusion, and placed in a cellar, will, in a few minutes, begin to relent, and have its surface softened by the imbibed moisture of the air, wherein, if it be left long, it will totally be dissolved. Boyle.

All nature mourns, the skies relent in show'rs, Hush'd are the birds, and clos'd the drooping flow'rs;

If Delia smile, the flow'rs begin to spring,
The skies to brighten, and the birds to sing. Pope.

3. To grow less intense.

I have marked in you a relenting truly, and a slackening of the main career, you had so notably begun, and almost performed. Sidney.

The workmen let glass cool by degrees in such relentings of fire, as they call their nealing heats, lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air. Digby.

4. To soften in temper; to grow tender; to feel compassion.

Can you behold
My tears, and not once relent? Shakspeare.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-ey'd fool
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
From his displeasure. Milton.

He sung, and hell consented
To hear the poet's pray'r;
Stern Proserpine relented,
And gave him back the fair. Pope.

To RELENT. v. a.

1. To slacken; to remit. Obsolete.

Apace he shot, and yet he fled apace,
And oftentimes he would relent his pace,
That him his foe more fiercely should pursue. Spens.

2. To soften; to mollify. Obsolete.

Air hated earth, and water hated fire,
Till love relented their rebellious ire. Spenser.

RELENTLESS. adj. [from relent.]

1. Unpitying; unmoved by kindness or tenderness.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.

Why should the weeping hero now Relentless to their wishes prove? Prior.

2. In Milton, it perhaps signifies unremitted; intensely fixed upon disquieting objects.

Only in destroying, I find ease
To my relentless thoughts. Paradise Lost.

RELEVANT. adj. [Fr.] Relieving. Di.

RELEVATION. n. f. [relevatio, Lat.] A raising or lifting up.

RELIANCE. n. f. [from rely.] Trust; dependence; confidence; repose of mind: with on before the object of trust.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakspeare.

That pellucid gelatinous substance, which he pitches upon with so great reliance and positiveness, is chiefly of animal constitution. Woodward.

He secured and encreased his prosperity, by an humble behaviour towards God, and a dutiful reliance on his providence. Atterbury.

They afforded a sufficient conviction of this truth, and a firm reliance on the promises contained in it. Rogers.

Resignation in death, and reliance on the divine mercies, give comfort to the friends of the dying. Clarissa.

Misfortunes often reduce us to a better reliance, than that we have been accustomed to fix upon. Clarissa.

RELIQUICK. n. f. [reliquiae, Lat. relique, Fr.]

1. That which remains; that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest. It is generally used in the plural.

Up dreary dame of darkness queen,
Go gather up the reliques of thy race,
Or else go them avenge. Spenser.

Shall we go see the relics of this town? Shaksp.

The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'ereaten faith are bound to Diomedes. Shakspeare.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n with the soul remains;
The relics of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden.

2. It is often taken for the body deserted by the soul.

What needs my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,

The labour of an age in piled stones?
Or that his hallow'd reliquies should be hid
Under a star-ypointed pyramid? Milton.

In peace, ye shades of our great grandfathers, rest;
Eternal spring, and rising flow'rs adorn
The relics of each venerable urn. Dryden.

Shall our relics second birth receive?
Sleep we to wake, and only die to live? Prior.

Thy relics, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope.

3. That which is kept in memory of another, with a kind of religious veneration.

Cowls flutter'd into rags, then reliquies leaves
The sport of winds. Milton.

This church is very rich in relics; among the rest, they show a fragment of Thomas à Becket, as indeed there are very few treasures of relics in Italy, that have not a tooth or a bone of this saint. Addison.

RELICKLY. adv. [from relick.] In the manner of relics. A word not used, nor elegantly formed.

Thrifty wench scrapes kitchen stuff,
And barreling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year
Relickly kept, perhaps buys wedding cheer. Donne.

RELICT. n. f. [relicte, old French; relicta, Latin.] A widow; a wife desolate by the death of her husband.

If the fathers and husbands were of the household of faith, then certainly their relics and children cannot be strangers in this household. Spratt.

Chaste relic!

Honour'd on earth, and worthy of the love
Of such a spouse as now resides above. Garth.

RELIEF. n. f. [relief, French.]

1. Alleviation of calamity; mitigation of pain or sorrow.

Thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,
Tending to some relief of our extremes. Milton.

2. That which frees from pain or sorrow.

He found his designed present would be a relief, and then he thought it an impertinence to consider what it could be called besides. Fell.

So should we make our death a glad relief
From future shame. Dryden.

Nor dar'd I to presume, that pres'd with grief,
My flight should urge you to this dire relief;
Stay, stay your steps. Dryden.

3. Dismission of a sentinel from his post.

For this relief, much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart. Shakespeare.

4. [releuium, law Lat.] Legal remedy of wrongs.

5. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal; the seeming prominence of a picture.

The figures of many ancient coins rise up in a much more beautiful relief than those on the modern; the face sinking by degrees in the several declensions of the empire, till about Constantine's time, it lies almost even with the surface of the medal. Addison.

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The forms august of kings, or conqu'ring chief,
E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have thin'd,
In polish'd verse, the manners, and the mind. Pope.

6. The exposure of any thing, by the proximity of something different.

RELIEVABLE. adj. [from relieve.] Capable of relief.

Neither can they, as to reparation, hold plea of things, wherein the party is relievable by common law. Hale.

To RELIEVE. v. a. [relevo, Lat. relever, French.]

1. To ease pain or sorrow.

2. To succour by assistance.

From thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor;
A pittance of thy land will set him free. Dryden.

3. To set a sentinel at rest, by placing another on his post.

Honest soldier, who hath relieved you?
—Bernardo has my place, give you good night. Shakespeare.

Relieve the centuries that have watch'd all night.
Dryden.

4. To right by law.

5. To recommend by the interposition of something dissimilar.

As the great lamp of day,
Through diff'rent regions does his course pursue,
And leaves one world but to revive a new;
While, by a pleasing change, the queen of night
Relieves his lustre with a milder light. Stepney.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome, the poet must not encumber his poem with too much business; but sometimes re- lieve the subject with a moral reflection. Addison.

6. To support; to assist; to recommend to attention.

Parallel, or like relations, alternately relieve each other; when neither will pass asunder, yet are they plausible together. Brown.

RELIEVER. n. f. [from relieve.] One that relieves.

He is the protector of his weakness, and the reliever of his wants. Rogers.

RELIEVO. n. f. [Italian.] The prominence of a figure or picture.

A convex mirror makes the objects in the middle come out from the superficies: the painter must do so in respect of the lights and shadows of his figures, to give them more relievo and more strength.
Dryden.

To RELIGHT. v. a. [re and light.] To light anew.

His pow'r can heal me, and relight my eye. Pope.

RELIGION. n. f. [religion, Fr. religio, Latin.]

1. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments.

He that is void of fear, may soon be just,
And no religion binds men to be traitors. B. Jonf.

One spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace
And judgment from above. Milton.

By religion, I mean that general habit of reverence towards the divine nature, whereby we are enabled and inclined to worship and serve God after such a manner as we conceive most agreeable to his will, so as to procure his favour and blessing. Wilk.

If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality. South.

By her inform'd, we best religion learn,
Its glorious object by her aid discern. Blackmore.

Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God. Watts.

I never once in my life considered, whether I was living as the laws of religion direct, or whether my way of life was such, as would procure me the mercy of God at this hour. Law.

2. A system of divine faith and worship, as opposite to others.

The image of a brute, adorn'd
With gay religions, full of pomp and gold. Milton.

The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is. More.

The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had.
Tillotson.

RELIGIONIST. n. f. [from religion.] A bigot to any religious persuasion.

The lawfulness of taking oaths may be revealed to the quakers, who then will stand upon as good a foot for preferment as any other subject; under such a motly administration, what pullings and hawlings, what a zeal and bias there will be in each religion-

ist to advance his own tribe, and depress the others.
Swift.

RELIGIOUS. adj. [religieux, Fr. religiosus, Latin.]

1. Pious; disposed to the duties of religion.

It is a matter of sound consequence, that all duties are by so much the better performed, by how much the men are more religious, from whose habits
the same proceed. Hooker.

When holy and devout religious christians Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from thence;

So sweet is zealous contemplation! Shakespeare.
Their lives

Religious titled them the sons of God. Milton.

2. Teaching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than gifts to lend;
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend. Wotton.

3. Among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

Certain fryars and religious men were moved with some zeal, to draw the people to the christian faith.
Abbot.

France has vast numbers of ecclesiastics, secular and religious. Addison.

What the protestants would call a fanatick, is in the Roman church a religious of such an order; as an English merchant in Lisbon, after some great disappointments in the world, resolved to turn capuchin. Addison.

4. Exact; strict.

5. Appropriated to strict observance of holy duties.

Her family has the same regulation as a religious house, and all its orders tend to the support of a constant regular devotion. Law.

RELIGIOUSLY. adv. [from religious.]

1. Piously; with obedience to the dictates of religion.

For, who will have his work his wished end to win,
Let him with hearty pray'r religiously begin. Dryden.

2. According to the rites of religion.

These are their brethren, whom you Goths behold

Alive and dead, and for their brethren slain
Religiously they ask a sacrifice. Shakespeare.

3. Reverently; with veneration.

Dost thou in all thy addresses to him, come into his presence with reverence, kneeling and religiously bowing thyself before him? Duppa.

4. Exactly; with strict observance.

The privileges, justly due to the members of the two houses and their attendants, are religiously to be maintained. Bacon.

RELIGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from religious.] The quality or state of being religious.

To RELINQUISH. v. a. [relinquo, Lat.]

1. To forsake; to abandon; to leave; to desert.

The habitation there was utterly relinquished.
Abbt.

The English colonies grew poor and weak, though the English lords grew rich and mighty; for they placed Irish tenants upon the lands relinquished by the English. Davies.

2. To quit; to release; to give up.

The ground of God's sole property in any thing is, the return of it made by man to God; by which act
he relinquishes and delivers back to God all his right to the use of that thing, which before had been freely granted him by God. South.

3. To forbear; to depart from.

In case it may be proved, that amongst the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful, in regard of some special bad and noisome quality; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom soever we have to retain the other still. Hooker.

REL

RELINQUISHMENT. n. s. [from relin- quish.] The act of forsaking.

Government or ceremonies, or whatsoever it be, which is popish, away with it: this is the thing they require in us, the utter relinquishment of all things popish. Hooker.

The natural tenderness of conscience, which must first create in the soul a sense of sin, and from thence produce a sorrow for it, and at length cause a relin- quishment of it, is took away by a customary repeated course of sinning. South.

RELISH. n. s. [from relecher, French;
to lick again. Minshew, Skinner.]

1. Taste; the effect of any thing on the palate: it is commonly used of a pleasing taste.

Under sharp, sweet, and sour, are abundance of immediate peculiar relishes or tastes, which experienced palates can easily discern. Boyle.

These two bodies, whose vapours are so pungent, spring from saltpetre, which betrays upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness.

Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstain'd
From this delightful fruit, nor known till now
True, relish, tasting. Milton.

Could we suppose their relishes as different there as here, yet the manna in heaven suits every palate.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh, and salt are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes to be found distinct in the different parts of the same plant. Locke.

2. Taste; small quantity just perceptible.

The king-becoming graces;
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare.

3. Liking; delight in any thing.

We have such a relish for faction, as to have lost that of wit. Addison.

Good men after death are distributed among these several islands with pleasures of different kinds, suitable to the relishes and perfections of those settled in them. Spectator.

4. Sense; power of perceiving excellence; taste. Addison uses it both with of and for before the thing.

A man, who has any relish for fine writing discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author every time he peruses him. Addison.

Some hidden seeds of goodness and knowledge give him a relish of such reflections, as improve the mind, and make the heart better. Spectator.

The pleasure of the proprietor, to whom things become familiar, depends, in a great measure, upon the relish of the spectator. Seed.

5. Delight given by any thing; the power by which pleasure is given.

Expectation whirls me round;
Th'imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shakspeare.

When liberty is gone,
Life grows insipid, and has lost its relish. Addison.

6. Cast; manner.

It preserves some relish of old writing. Pope.

TO RELISH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give a taste to any thing.

On smoking lard they dine;
A sav'ry bit that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden.

2. To taste; to have a liking.

I love the people;
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause. Shakspeare.

How will dissenting brethren relish it?

What will malignants say?
Men of nice palates would not relish Aristotle, as drest up by the schoolmen. Baker.

He knows how to prize his advantages, and relish
the honours which he enjoys. Atterbury.

You are to nourish your spirit with pious readings, and holy meditations, with watchings, fastings, and prayers, that you may taste, and relish, and desire that eternal state, which is to begin when this life ends. Law.

REL

TO RELISH. v. n.

1. To have a pleasing taste.

The ivory feet of tables were carved into the shape of lions, without which, their greatest dainties would not relish to their palates. Hakewill.

2. To give pleasure.

Had I been the finder-out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other descends. Shaks.

3. To have a flavour.

A theory, which how much soever it may relish of wit and invention, hath no foundation in nature.

RELISHABLE. adj. [from relish.] Gustable;
having a taste.

TO RELIVE. v. n. [re and live.] To revive;
to live anew. Not used.

The thing on earth, which is of most avail,
Any virtue's branch and beauty's bud,
Reliven not for any good. Spenser.

TO RELOVE. v. a. [re and love.] To love in return. Not used.

To own for him so familiar and levelling an affection as love, much more to expect to be reloved by him, were not the least saucy presumption man could be guilty of, did not his own commandments make it a duty. Boyle.

RELUCENT. adj. [relucens, Lat.] Shining; transparent; pellucid.

In brighter mazes, the relucens stream Plays o'er the mead. Thomson.

TO RELUCT. v. n. [reluctor, Latin.] To struggle again.

We, with studied mixtures, force our relucting appetites, and with all the spells of epicurism, con-jure them up, that we may lay them again.

RELUCTANCE. n. s. [reluctor, Latin.]

RELUCTANCY. n. s. Unwillingness; repugnance; struggle in opposition: with to or against.

A little more weight, added to the lower of the marbles, is able to surmount their reluctancy to separation, notwithstanding the supposed danger of thereby introducing a vacuum. Boyle.

It favours
Reluctance against God, and his just yoke Laid on our necks. Milton.

Bear witness, heav'n, with what reluctancy
Her helpless innocence I doom to die. Dryden.

Aeneas, when forced in his own defence to kill Lausus, the poet shows compassionate, and tempering the severity of his looks with a reluctance to the action; he has pity on his beauty and his youth;
and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature.

How few would be at the pains of acquiring such an habit, and of conquering all the reluctancies and difficulties that lay in the way towards virtue?

Many hard stages of discipline must he pass through, before he can subdue the reluctances of his corruption. Rogers.

With great reluctancy man is persuaded to acknowledge this necessity. Rogers.

RELUCTANT. adj. [reluctans, Lat.] Unwilling; acting with repugnance.

Reluctant; but in vain! a greater pow'r
Now rul'd him. Milton.

Some refuge in the muse's art I found;
Reluctant now I touch'd the trembling string,
Bereft of him who taught me how to sing. Tickel.

TO RELUCTATE. v. n. [reluctor, Latin.]
To resist; to struggle against.

In violation of God's patrimony, the first sacrilege is looked on with some horror, and men devise colours to delude their reluctating consciences; but when they have once made the breach, their scru-pulousity soon retires. Decay of Piety.

RELUCTATION. n. s. [reluctor, Latin.]
Repugnance; resistance.

The king prevailed with the prince, though not without some reluctation. Bacon.

Adam's sin, or the curse upon it, did not deprive him of his rule, but left the creatures to a rebellion or reluctation. Bacon.

REM

TO RELUME. v. a. To light anew; to rekindle.

Relume her ancient light, nor kindle new. Pope.
TO RELUMINE. v. a. To light anew.

Once put out thy light;
I know not where is that Promethean heat;
That can thy light relumine. Shakspeare.

TO RELY. v. n. [re and lie.] To lean upon with confidence; to put trust in;
to rest upon; to depend upon: with on.

Go in thy native innocence! rely
On what thou hast of virtue; summon all!
For God tow'ards thee hath done his part, do thine. Milton.

Egypt does not on the clouds rely,
But to the Nile owes more than to the sky. Waller.

Thus Solon to Pisistratus reply'd,
Demanded, on what succour he rely'd,
When with so few he boldly did engage?

He said, he took his courage from his age. Denham.
Though reason is not to be relied upon, as universally sufficient to direct us what to do; yet it is generally to be relied upon and obeyed, where it tells us what we are not to do. South.

Fear relies upon a natural love of ourselves, and is complicated with a necessary desire of our own preservation. Tillotson.

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding that relies on them. Locke.

The pope was become a party in the cause, and could not be relied upon for a decision. Atterbury.

Do we find so much religion in the age, as to rely on the general practice for the measures of our duty? Rogers.

No prince can ever rely on the fidelity of that man, who is a rebel to his Creator. Rogers.

TO REMAIN. v. n. [remaneo, Latin.]

1. To be left out of a greater quantity or number.

That that remains, shall be buried in death. Job.
Bake that which ye will bake to-day; and that which remaineth over, lay up until the morning. Exodus.

Childless thou art, childless remain. Milton.
In the families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to inheritance. Locke.

4. Not to be lost.

Now somewhat sing, whose endless souvenance
Among the shepherds may for aye remain. Spenser.

I was increased more than all that were before me, also my wisdom remained with me. Ecclesi.

If what you have heard, shall remain in you, ye shall continue in the Son. 1 John.

5. To be left as not comprised.

That a father may have some power over his children, is easily granted; but that an elder brother has so over his brethren, remains to be proved. Locke.

6. To continue in a place.

TO REMAIN. v. a. To await; to be left to.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft, coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain
That of such falsters friendship shall be fain. Spenser.

With oaken staff
I'll raise such outeries on thy clatter'd iron,
Which long shall not withhold me from thy head,
That in a little time, while breath remains thee,
Thou oft shalt wish thyself at Gath to boast,
But never shalt see Gath. Milton.

If thence he 'scape, what remains him less Than unknown dangers? Milton.

The easier conquest now Remains thee, aided by this host of friends, Back on thy foes more glorious to return. Milton.

REMAIN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Relick; that which is left. Generally used in the plural.

I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniencies, more than their small remain life seemed destined to undergo. Osops.

REM

2. The body left by the soul.

But fowls obscene dismember'd his remains,
And dogs had torn him. Pope.
Oh would'st thou sing what heroes Windsor bore,
Or raise old warriors, whose ador'd remains,
In weeping vaults, her hallow'd earth contains! Pope.

3. Abode; habitation. Not in use.

A most miraculous work in this good king,
Which often since my here remain in England,
I've seen him do. Shakspeare.

REMAINDER. adj. [from remain.] Remaining; refuse; left.

His brain
Is as dry as the remainder bisket
After a voyage. Shakspeare.
We turn not back the filks upon the merchant,
When we have spoil'd them; nor the remainder viands
We do not throw in unrespective place,
Because we now are full. Shakspeare.

REMAINDER. n. f.

1. What is left; remnant; relics.

The gods protect you,
And bless the good remainders of the court! Shaks.
It may well employ the remainder of their lives to perform it to purpose, I mean, the work of evangelical obedience. Hammond.

Mahomet's crescent by our feuds encreast,
Blasted the learn'd remainders of the East. Denb.
Could bare ingratitude have made any one so diabolical, had not cruelty came in as a second to its assistance, and cleared the villain's beasts of all remainders of humanity? South.

There are two restraints which God hath put upon human nature, shame and fear; shame is the weaker, and hath place only in those in whom there are some remainders of virtue. Tillotson.

What madness moves you, matrons, to destroy
The last remainders of unhappy Troy? Dryden.
If he, to whom ten talents were committed, has squandered away five, he is concerned to make a double improvement of the remainder. Rogers.

If these decoctions be repeated till the water comes off clear, the remainder yields no salt. Arbutnot.

Of six millions raised every year for the service of the publick, one third is intercepted through the several subordinations of artful men in office, before the remainder is applied to the proper use. Swift.

2. The body when the soul is departed; remains.

Shew us
The poor remainder of Andronicus. Shakspeare.

A fine is levied to grant a reversion or remainder, expectant upon a lease that yieldeth no rent. Bacon.

TO REMAKE. v. a. [re and make.] To make anew.

That, which she owns above her, must perfectly remake us after the image of our maker. Glanville.

TO REMAND. v. a. [re and mando, Lat.] To send back; to call back.

The better sort quitted their freeholds and fled into England, and never returned, though many laws were made to remand them back. Davies.

Philoxenus, for despising some dull poetry of Dionysius, was condemned to dig in the quarries;
from whence being remanded, at his return Dionysius produced some other of his verses, which as soon as Philoxenus had read, he made no reply, but, calling to the waiters, said, carry me again to the quarries. Government of the Tongue.

REMANENT. n. f. [remanens, Latin; re-

You said, if I return'd next size in Lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace;
In th' interim my letters should take place
Of affidavits. Donne.

REMNANT. n. f. [corrupted from remantent.] Residue; that which is left; that which remains.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood,
Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost? Shakspeare.
Bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field,
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts. Shakspeare.

About his shelves
Remnants of packthread and old cakes of roses
Were thinly scatter'd. Shakspeare.
I was entreated to get them some respite and breathing by a cessation, without which they saw no probability to preserve the remnant that had yet escaped. King Charles.
It seems that the remnants of the generation of men were in such a deluge saved. Bacon.

The remnant of my tale is of a length
To tire your patience. Dryden.
A feeble army and an empty senate,
Remnants of mighty battles fought in vain. Addison.
See the poor remnants of these slighted hairs!
My hands shall rend what e'en thy rapine spares. Pope.

The frequent use of the latter was a remnant of popery, which never admitted scripture in the vulgar tongue. Swift.

REMNANT. adj. [corruptly formed from remanent.] Remaining; yet left.

It bid her feel
No future pain for me; but instant wed
A lover more proportion'd to her bed;
And quiet dedicate her remnant life
To the just duties of an humble wife. Prior.

REMOLTEN. part. [from remelt.] Melted
again.

It were good to try in glass works, whether the crude materials, mingled with glass already made and remolten, do not facilitate the making of glass with less heat. Bacon.

REMONSTRANCE. n. f. [remonstrance, Fr.
from remonstrate.]

1. Show; discovery. Not in use.

You may marvel, why I would not rather Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power,
Than let him be so lost. Shakspeare.

2. Strong representation.

The same God, which revealeth it to them, would also give them power of confirming it unto others, either with miraculous operation, or with strong and invincible remonstrance of sound reason. Hooker.

A large family of daughters have drawn up a remonstrance, in which they set forth, that their father, having refused to take in the Speclator, they offered to 'bate him the article of bread and butter in the tea-table. Speclator.

Importunate passions surround the man, and will not suffer him to attend to the remonstrances of justice. Rogers.

or that they had not wickedness enough to design and execute it. Clarendon.

2. Tenderneſs; pity; ſympathetick for-row.

Many little esteem of their own lives, yet, for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld. Spenser.

Shylock, thou lead'st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then 'tis thought,
Thou'lt shew thy mercy and remorse more strange,
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty. Shakspeare.

The rogues slighted me into the river, with as little remorse as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies. Shakspeare.

Curse on th' unpard'ning prince, whom tears can draw

To no remorse; who rules by lion's law. Dryden.

REMO'RSEFUL. adj. [remorse and full.]

1. Tender; compassionate.

O Eglamour, think not I flatter,
Valiant and wise, remorseful, well accomplish'd,
Shakspeare.

Love, that comes too late,

2. A sign that draws men together.

The philosophers-stone and a holy war are but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wear their feather in their head instead of their hat.

Bacon.

3. Place appointed for assembly.

A commander of many ships should rather keep his fleet together than have it severed far asunder; for the attendance of meeting them again at the next rendezvous would consume time and victual.

Raleigh.

The king appointed his whole army to be drawn together to a rendezvous at Marlborough.

Clarendon.

This was the general rendezvous which they all got to, and, mingling more and more with that oily liquor, they sucked it all up.

Burnet.

force of the pressure, and so taking away the sense of pain.

Ray.

RE'NNET. n. f. See RUNNET.

A putridinous ferment coagulates all humours, as milk with rennet is turned.

Floyer.

RE'NNET. } n. f. [properly reinette, a RENNE'TING. } little queen.] A kind of apple.

A golden rennet is a very pleasant and fair fruit, of a yellow flush, and the best of bearers for all sorts of soil; of which there are two sorts, the large sort and the small.

Mortimer.

Ripe pulpy apples, as pippins and rennetings, are of a syrupy tenacious nature.

Mortimer.

TO RE'NOVATE. v. a. [renovo, Latin.]

To renew; to restore to the first state.

All nature feels the renovating force
Of winter, only to the thoughtless eye
In ruin seen.

Thomson.

RENOVATION. n. f. [renovation, Fr. reno-vatio, Latin.] Renewal; the act of renewing; the state of being renewed.

Sound continueth some small time, which is a renovation, and not a continuance; for the body per-cuss'd hath a trepidation wrought in the minute parts, and so reneweth the percussive of the air.

Bacon.

The kings entered into speech of renewing the treaty; the king saying, that though king Philip's person were the same, yet his fortunes were rais'd;
in which case a renovation of treaty was used.

Bacon.

To second life

Wak'd in the renovation of the just,
Refigns him up, with heav'n and earth renew'd.

Milton.

TO RENOUN'CE. v. a. [renoncer, Fr.

From Thebes my birth I own; and no disgrace
Can force me to renounce the honour of my race.

Dryden.

2. To quit upon oath.

This world I do renounce; and in your fights
Shake patiently my great affliction off. Shakspeare.
Pride and passion, and the opinions of the world, must not be our counsellors; for we renounced them at our baptism.

Kettlewell.

TO RENOUN'CE. v. n. To declare renunciation. The following passage is a mere gallicism; renoncer à mon sang.

On this firm principle I ever stood;
He of my sons, who fails to make it good,
By one rebellious act renounces to my blood.

Dryden.

RENOU'NCEMENT. n. f. [from renounce.]
Act of renouncing; renunciation.

I hold you as a thing enkind and fainted;
By your renouncement, an immortal spirit.

Shakspeare.

RENO'WN. n. f. [renommée, Fr.] Fame;
celebrity; praise widely spread.

She

Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown.

Shakspeare.

'Tis of more renown

To make a river, than to build a town.

Waller.

Nor envy we

Thy great renown, nor grudge thy victory.

Dryden.

TO RENO'WN. v. a. [renommer, Fr. from the noun.] To make famous.

Let us satisfy our eyes

With the memorials and the things of fame,
That do renown this city.

Shakspeare.

Soft elocution does thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies or to lash at vice.

Dryden.

In solemn silence stand

Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renown,
And emperors in Parian marble frown.

Addison.

A bard, whom pilfer'd pastorals renown.

Pope.

RENO'WNED. particip. adj. [from renown.]
Famous; celebrated; eminent; famed.

These were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes, heads of thousands.

Numbers.

That thrice renowned and learned French king, finding Petrarch's tomb without any inscription, wrote one himself; saying, shame it was, that he who sung his mistress's praise seven years before her death, should twelve years want an epitaph.

Peacham.

The rest were long to tell, though far renown'd.

Milton.

Of all the cities in Roman lands,
The chief and most renown'd Ravenna stands,
Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts.

Dryden.

Ilva,

An idle renown'd for steel and unexhausted mines.

Dryden.

RENT. n. f. [from rend.] A break; a laceration.

This council made a schism and rent from the most ancient and purest churches which lived before them.

White.

Thou viper

Hast cancell'd kindred, made a rent in nature,
And through her holy bowels gnaw'd thy way,
Through thy own blood to empire.

Dryden.

He who sees this vast rent in so high a rock, how the convex parts of one side exactly tally with the concave of the other, must be satisfied, that it was the effect of an earthquake.

Addison.

TO RENT. v. a. [rather to rend.] To tear; to lacerate.

A time to rent, and a time to sew. Ecclesiasticus.

TO RENT. v. n. [now written rant.] To roar; to bluster: we still say, a tearing fellow, for a noisy bully.

He ventur'd to dismiss his fear,

That partings went to rent and tear,
And give the desperate attack
To danger still behind its back.

Hudibras.

RENT. n. f. [rente, Fr.]

1. Revenue; annual payment.

Idol ceremony,

What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?
O ceremony shew me but thy worth!

Shakspeare.

REP

I bought an annual rent or two,
And live just as you see I do. Pope.

2. Money paid for any thing held of another.
Such is the mould, that the blest tenant feeds
On precious fruits, and pays his rent in weeds. Waller.

Folks in mudwall tenement,
Present a peppercorn for rent. Prior.

To RENT. v. a. [renter, Fr.]

1. To hold by paying rent.
When a servant is called before his master, it is often to know, whether he passed by such a ground, if the old man who rents it is in good health. Spectator.

2. To set to a tenant.

RENTABLE. adj. [from rent.] That may be rented.

RENTAL. n. s. [from rent.] Schedule or account of rents.

RENTER. n. s. [from rent.] He that holds by paying rent.
The estate will not be let for one penny more or less to the renter, amongst whomsoever the rent he pays be divided. Locke.

RENVERSED. adj. [renversé, Fr.] Overturned. Spenser.

RENUNCIATION. n. s. [renunciatio, from renuncio, Latin.] The act of renounc-

French.]

1. To restore after injury or dilapidation.
Let the priests repair the breaches of the house. 2 Kings.
The fines imposed were the more repined against,
because they were assigned to the rebuilding and repairing of St. Paul's church. Clarendon.

2. To amend any injury by an equivalent.
He justly hath driv'n out his rebel foes
To deepest hell; and, to repair their loss, Created this new happy race of men. Milton.

3. To fill up anew, by something put in the place of what is lost.
To be reveng'd,
And to repair his numbers thus impair'd. Milton.

REPAIR. n. s. [from the verb.] Reparation; supply of loss; restoration after dilapidation.
Before the curing of a strong disease,
Ev'n in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest. Shakspeare.
He cast in his mind for the repair of the cathedral church. Fell.
Temperance, in all methods of curing the gout, is a regular and simple diet, proportioning the daily repairs to the daily decays of our wasting bodies. Temple.
All automata need a frequent repair of new strength, the causes whence their motion does proceed being subject to fail. Wilkins.

To REPAIR. v. n. [repairer, Fr.] To go to; to betake himself.
May all to Athens back again repair. Shaksp.

REP

Depart from hence in peace,
Search the wide world, and where you please repair. Dryden.

'Tis fix'd; th' irrevocable doom of Jove:
Haste then, Cyllenius, through the liquid air,
Go mount the winds, and to the shades repair. Pope.

REPAIR. n. s. [repaire, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Resort; abode.
He saw Ulysses; at his ships repaire,
That had been bruht with the enraged aire. Chapm.
So 'scapes th' insulting fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air;
There the fierce winds his tender force assail,
And beat him downward to his first repair. Dryden.

2. Act of betaking himself any whither.
The king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, and for a preservation of the peace. Clarendon.

REPAIRER. n. s. [from repair.] Amender;
restorer.
He that governs well, leads the blind, but he that teaches, gives him eyes; and it is a glorious thing to have been the repairer of a decayed intellect. South.
O sacred rest!
O peace of mind! repairer of decay,
Whose balms renew the limbs to labours of the day. Dryden.

REPA'NDOUS. adj. [repandus, Lat.] Bent upward.
Though they be drawn repandous or convexedly crooked in one piece, yet the dolphin that carrieth Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed in another. Brown.

REPARABLE. adj. [reparable, Fr. repara-bilis, Lat.] Capable of being amended, retrieved, or supplied by something equivalent.
The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood, and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon.
When its spirit is drawn from wine, it will not by the re-union of its constituent liquors, be reduced to its pristine nature; because the workmanship of nature, in the disposition of the parts, was too elaborate to be imitable, or reparable by the bare apposi-tion of those divided parts to each other. Boyle.
An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as is reparable, and can be made to the wronged person; to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces. Taylor.

REPARABLY. adv. [from reparable.] In a manner capable of remedy, by restoration, amendment, or supply.

REPARATION. n. s. [reparation, French;
reparatio, from reparo, Latin.]

1. The act of repairing; instauration.
Antonius Philosophus took care of the reparation of the highways. Arbutnot.

2. Supply of what is wasted.
When the organs of sense want their due repose and necessary reparations, the soul exerts herself in her several faculties. Addison.
In this moveable body, the fluid and solid parts must be consumed; and both demand a constant reparation. Arbutnot.

3. Recompense for any injury; amends.
The king should be able, when he had cleared himself, to make him reparation. Bacon.
I am sensible of the scandal I have given by my loose writings, and make what reparation I am able. Dryden.

REPARATIVE. n. s. [from repair.] Whatever makes amends for loss or injury.
New preparatives were in hand, and partly repa-ratives of the former beaten at sea. Wotton.
Suits are unlawfully entered, when they are vindictive, not reparative; and begun only for revenge, not for reparation of damages. Kettlewell.

REPAREE. n. s. [repartie, Fr.] Smart reply.
The fools overflowed with smart reparees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits, by being called coxcombs. Dryden.

REP

Cupid was as bad as he;
Hear but the youngster's repatee. Prior.

To REPAREE. v. n. To make smart replies.
High flights she had, and wit at will,
And so her tongue lay seldom still;
For in all visits who but she,
To argue or to repatee? Prior.

To REPA'SS. v. a. [repasser, French.] To pass again; to pass or travel back.
Well we have pass'd, and now repas'd the seas,
And brought desir'd help. Shakspeare.
We shall find small reason to think, that Abraham pass'd and repas'd those ways more often than he was enforced so to do, if we consider that he had no other comforter in this wearisome journey, than the strength of his faith in God. Raleigh.
If his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Homeward with pious speed repas the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope.

To REPA'SS. v. n. To go back in a road.
Five girdles bind the skies, the torrid zone
Glow with the passing and repassing sun. Dryden.

REPA'ST. n. s. [repas, Fr. re and pastus,
Latin.]

1. A meal; act of taking food.
From dance to sweet repast they turn Desirous; all in circles as they stood,
Tables are set. Milton.
What neat repast shall feast us, light and choice,
Of Attick taste, with wine. Milton.
Sleep, that is thy best repast,
Yet of death it bears a taste,
And both are the same thing at last. Denham.
The day
Had summon'd him to due repast at noon. Dryden.
Keep regular hours for repast and sleep. Arbutnot.

2. Food; victuals.
Go, and get me some repast;
I care not what, so it be wholesome food. Shaksp.

To REPA'ST. v. a. [repastre, Fr. from the noun.] To feed; to feast.
To his good friends I'll ope my arm,
And, like the kind life-rend'ring pelican,
Repast them with my blood. Shakspeare.

REPA'STURE. n. s. [re and pasture.] Entertainment. Not in use.
He from forage will incline to play;
But if thou strive, poor soul, what art thou then?
Food for his rage, repasture for his den. Shakspeare.

To REPA'Y. v. a. [repayer, Fr. re and pay.]

1. To pay back in return, in requital, or in revenge.
According to their deeds he will repay recompense to his enemies; to the islands he will repay recompense. Isaiah.

2. To recompense.
He clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts; or slain,
Or as the snake with youthful coat repaid. Milt.

3. To compensate.
The false honour, which he had so long enjoyed,
was plentifully repaid in contempt. Bacon.

4. To requite either good or ill.
The poorest service is repaid with thanks. Shaksp.
Fav'ring heav'n repaid my glorious toils
With a sack'd palace and barbarick spoils. Pope.
I have fought well for Persia, and repaid
The benefit of birth with honest service. Rowe.

5. To reimburse with what is owed.
If you repay me not on such a day,
Such sums as are express'd in the condition,
Let the forfeit be an equal pound of your fair flesh. Shakspeare.

REPA'YMENT. n. s. [from repay.]

1. The act of repaying.

2. The thing repaid.
The centesima usura it was not lawful to exceed;
and what was paid over it, was reckoned as a repayment of part of the principal. Arbutnot.

To REPEAL. v. a. [rappellar, Fr.]

1. To recall. Out of use.

REP

- I will repeal thee, or be well assur'd,
Adventure to be banished myself. Shakspeare.
I here forget all former griefs;
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again. Shakspeare.
2. To abrogate; to revoke.
Laws, that have been approved, may be again repealed, and disputed against by the authors themselves. Hooker.
Adam soon repeal'd
The doubts that in his heart arose. Milton Statutes are silently repealed, when the reason ceases for which they were enacted. Dryden.
- REPEAL, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Recall from exile. Not in use.
If the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man. Shakspeare.
2. Revocation; abrogation.
The king being advertised, that the over-large grants of lands and liberties made the lords so insolent, did absolutely resume all such grants; but the earl of Desmond above all found himself grieved with this resumption or repeal of liberties, and declared his dislike. Davies.
If the presbyterians should obtain their ends, I could not be sorry to find them mistaken in the point which they have most at heart, by the repeal of the test; I mean the benefit of employments. Swift.
- To REPEAT, v. a. [repeto, Lat. repeter, French.]
1. To iterate; to use again; to do again.
He, though his power
Creation could repeat, yet would be loth
Us to abolish. Milton.
Where sudden alterations are not necessary, the same effect may be obtained by the repeated force of diet with more safety to the body. Arbutnot.
2. To speak again.
The psalms, for the excellency of their use, deserve to be oftner repeated; but that their multitude permitteth not any oftner repetition. Hooker.
3. To try again.
Neglecting for Creusa's life his own,
Repeats the danger of the burning town. Waller.
Beyond this place you can have no retreat,
Stay here, and I the danger will repeat. Dryden.
4. To recite; to rehearse.
These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself,
Have banish'd me from Scotland. Shakspeare.
Thou their natures know'st, and gav'st them names,
Needless to thee repeated. Milton.
He repeated some lines of Virgil, suitable to the occasion. Waller.
- REPEAT'EDLY, adv. [from repeated.]
Over and over; more than once.
And are not these vices, which lead into damnation, repeatedly, and most forcibly cautioned against? Stephens.
- REPEAT'ER, n. f. [from repeat.]
1. One that repeats; one that recites.
2. A watch that strikes the hours at will, by compression of a spring.
- To REPEL, v. a. [repello, Latin.]
1. To drive back any thing.
Neither doth Tertullian bewray this weakness in striking only, but also in repelling their strokes with whom he contendeth. Hooker.
With hills of slain on ev'ry side,
Hippomedon repell'd the hostile tide. Pope.
2. To drive back an assailant.
Stand fast; and all temptation to transgress repel.
Milton.
Repel the Tuscan foes, their city seize,
Protect the Latians in luxurious ease. Dryden.
Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made,
And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.
- To REPEL, v. n.
1. To act with force contrary to force impressed.
From the same repelling power it seems to be, that lies walk upon the water without wetting their feet.
Newton.
2. To repel in medicine, is to prevent

REP

- such an afflux of a fluid to any particular part, as would raise it into a tumour.
- REPELLENT, n. f. [repellens, Latin.] An application that has a repelling power.
In the cure of an erysipelas, whilst the body abounds with bilious humours, there is no admitting of repellants, and by discutients you will encrease the heat. Wiseman.
- REPELLER, n. f. [from repel.] One that repels.
- To REPENT, v. n. [repentir, French.]
1. To think on any thing past with sorrow.
Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I pass'd that bill; nor repentings after. K. Charles.
Upon any deviation from virtue, every rational creature, so deviating, should condemn, renounce, and be sorry for every such deviation; that is, repent
of it. South.
First she relents
With pity, of that pity then repents. Dryden.
Still you may prove the terror of your foes;
Teach traitors to repent of faithless leagues. A. Philips.
2. To express sorrow for something past.
Poor Enobarbus did before thy face repent. Shakspeare.
3. To change the mind from some painful motive.
God led them not through the land of the Philistines, lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and they return. Exodus.
4. To have such sorrow for sin, as produces amendment of life.
Nineveh repented at the preaching of Jonas.
Matthew.
I will clear their senses dark
What may suffice, and soften stony hearts
To pray, repent, and bring obedience due. Milton.
- To REPENT, v. a.
1. To remember with sorrow.
If Desdemona will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful sollicitation. Shakspeare.
2. To remember with pious sorrow.
Thou, like a contrite penitent
Charitably warn'd of thy sins, dost repent
These vanities and giddinesses, lo
I shut my chamber-door; come, let us go. Donne.
His late follies he would late repent. Dryden.
3. [se repentir, French.] It is used with the reciprocal pronoun.
I repent me that the duke is slain. Shakspeare.
No man repented him of his wickedness; saying,
what have I done? Jeremiah.
Judas, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself. Matthew.
My father has repented him ere now,
Or will repent him when he finds me dead. Dryden.
Each age sinn'd on;
Till God arose, and great in anger said,
Lo! it repenteth me that man was made. Prior.
- REPENTANCE, n. f. [repentance, French;
from repent.]
1. Sorrow for any thing past.
The first step towards a woman's humility, seems to require a repentance of her education. Law.
2. Sorrow for sin, such as produces newness of life; penitence.
Repentance so altereth a man through the mercy of God, be he ever so defiled, that it maketh him pure. Whitgift.
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is not of heav'n nor earth; for these are pleased;
By penitence th' Eternal's wrath's appeas'd. Shakspeare.
Repentance is a change of mind, or a conversion from sin to God: not some one bare act of change, but a lasting durable state of new life, which is called regeneration. Hammond.
In regard of secret and hidden faults, unless God should accept of a general repentance for unknown sins, few or none at all could be saved. Perkins.
This is a confidence, of all the most irrational;
for upon what ground can a man promise himself a

REP

- future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futuraity? South.
- REPENTANT, adj. [repentant, Fr. from repent.]
1. Sorrowful for the past.
2. Sorrowful for sin.
Thus they, in lowliest plight, repentant stood.
Milton.
3. Expressing sorrow for sin.
After I have interr'd this noble king,
And wet his grave with my repentant tears,
I will with all expedient duty see you. Shakspeare.
There is no malice in this burning coal;
The breath of heav'n hath blown its spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on its head. Shakspeare.
Relentless walls! whose darksome round contains Repentant sighs and voluntary pains. Pope.
- To REPEOPLE, v. a. [re and people; re- peupler, Fr.] To stock with people anew.
An occurrence of such remark, as the universal flood and the repeopling of the world, must be fresh in memory for about eight hundred years; especially considering, that the peopling of the world was gradual. Hale.
- To REPERCUSS, v. a. [repercussio, reper- cussus, Latin.] To beat back; to drive back; to rebound. Not in use.
Air in ovens, though it doth boil and dilate itself,
and is repercussed, yet it is without noise. Bacon.
- REPERCUSSION, n. f. [from repercussus; repercussio, Lat. repercussion, French.] The act of driving back; rebound.
In echoes, there is no new elision, but a reper- cussion. Bacon.
By repercussion beams ingender fire,
Shapes by reflection shapes beget;
The voice itself when stopp'd does back retire,
And a new voice is made by it. Cowley.
They various ways recoil, and swiftly flow
By mutual repercussions to and fro. Blackmore.
- REPERCUSSIVE, adj. [repercussif, Fr.]
1. Having the power of driving back, or causing a rebound.
And repercussive rocks renew'd the sound.
Pattison.
2. Repellant.
Blood is stanch'd by astringent and repercussive medicines. Bacon.
Defluxions, if you apply a strong repercussive to the place affected, and do not take away the cause, will shift to another place. Bacon.
3. Driven back; rebounding. Not proper.
Amid Carnarvon's mountains rages loud
The repercussive roar, with mighty crash Tumble the smitten cliffs. Thomson.
- REPERTITIOUS, adj. [repertus, Latin.] Found; gained by finding. Diſc.
- REPERTORY, n. f. [repertoire, Fr. reper- itorium, Lat.] A treasury; a magazine;
a book in which any thing is to be found.
- REPETITION, n. f. [repetition, Fr. repeti- tio, Latin.]
1. Iteration of the same thing.
The frequent repetition of alimient is necessary for repairing the fluids and solids. Arbutnot.
2. Recital of the same words over again.
The psalms, for the excellency of their use, deserve to be oftner repeated; but that the multitude of them permitteth not any oftner repetition. Hooker.
3. The act of reciting or rehearsing.
If you conquer Rome, the benefit,
Which you shall thereby reap, is such a name,
Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses. Shakspeare.
4. Recital.
I love such tears,
As fall from fit notes, beaten through mine ears,
With repetitions of what heaven hath done. Chapman.
5. Recital from memory, as distinct from reading.
- To REPINE, v. n. [re and pine.]
1. To fret; to vex himself; to be discontented: with at or against.

REP

Of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd
Shakspeare.
The fines imposed were the more repined against,
because they were assigned to the rebuilding of St.
Paul's church. Clarendon.
If you think how many diseases, and how much poverty there is in the world, you will fall down upon your knees, and, instead of repining at one affliction, will admire so many blessings received at the hand of God. Temple.

2. To envy.
The ghosts repine at violated night;
And curse th' invading sun, and sicken at the sight.
Dryden.
Just in the gate
Dwell pale diseases and repining age. Dryden.
REPINER. n. f. [from repine.] One that frets or murmurs.
TO REPLA'CE. v. a. [replacer, Fr. re and place.]
1. To put again in the former place.
The earl being apprehended, upon examination cleared himself so well, as he was replaced in his government. Bacon.
The bowls, remov'd for fear,
The youths replac'd; and soon restor'd the cheer.
Dryden.
2. To put in a new place.
His gods put themselves under his protection, to be replaced in their promised Italy. Dryden.
TO REPLAI'T. v. a. [re and plait.] To fold one part often over another.
In Raphael's first works, are many small foldings often replaited, which look like so many whip-cords.
Dryden.
TO REPLA'NT. v. a. [replanter, French;
re and plant.] To plant anew.
Small trees being yet unripe, covered in autumn with dung until the spring, take up and replant in good ground. Bacon.
REPLANTA'TION. n. f. [from replant.]
The act of planting again.
TO REPLE'NISH. v. a. [repleo, from re and plenus, Lat. repleui, old Fr.]
1. To stock; to fill.
Multiply and replenish the earth. Genesis.
The woods replenished with deer, and the plains with fowl. Heylin.
The waters
With fish replenish'd, and the air with fowl. Milt.
2. To finish; to consummate; to complete.
Not proper, nor in use.
We smother'd
The most replenished sweet work of nature,
That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd. Shak.
TO REPLE'NISH. v. n. To recover the former fulness. Not in use.
The humours in men's bodies encrease and decrease as the moon doth; and therefore purge some day after the full; for then the humours will not re- plenish so soon. Bacon.
REPLE'TE. adj. [replete, French; repletus, Latin.] Full; completely filled; filled to exuberance.
The world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks;
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts. Shaksp.
This mordication, if in over a high degree, is little better than the corrosion of poison; as sometimes in antimony, if given to bodies not replete with humours; for where humours abound, the humours save the parts. Bacon.
His words, replete with guile,
Into her heart too easy entrance won. Milton.
In a dog, out of whose eye, being wounded, the aqueous humour did copiously flow, yet in fix hours the bulb of the eye was again replete with its humour, without the application of any medicines.
Ray.
REPLE'TION. n. f. [repletion, French.]
The state of being over full.
The tree had too much repletion, and was oppressed with its own sap; for repletion is an enemy to generation. Bacon.

REP

All dreams
Are from repletion and complexion bred;
From rising fumes of undigested food. Dryden.
Thirst and hunger may be satisfy'd;
But this repletion is to love deny'd. Dryden.
The action of the stomach is totally stopped by too great repletion. Arbutnot.
REPLE'VABLE. adj. [replegiabilis, barba-

Sparta. Broome.
TO REPLY. v. n. [repliquer, Fr.] To answer; to make a return to an answer.
O man! who art thou that replyest against God.
Romans.
Would we ascend higher to the rest of these lewd persons, we should find what reason Castilio's painter had to reply upon the cardinal, who blamed him for putting a little too much colour into St.
Peter and Paul's faces: that it was true in their life-time they were pale mortified men, but that since they were grown ruddy, by blushing at the sins of their successors. Atterbury.
TO REPLY. v. a. To return for an answer.

Eurydice the rocks and river-banks reply'd. Dryden.
REPLY. n. f. [replique, French.] Answer; return to an answer.
But now return,
And with their faint reply this answer join. Shaksp.
If I sent him word, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: if again, it was not well cut, this is called the reply churlish.
Shakspeare.
One rises up to make replies to establish or con-fute what has been offered on each side of the question. Watts.
To whom with sighs, Ulysses gave reply;
Ah, why ill-suited pastime must I try? Pope.
REPLYER. n. f. [from reply.] He that answers; he that makes a return to an answer.
At an act of the commencement, the answerer gave for his question, that an aristocracy was better than a monarchy: the replyer did tax him, that, being a private bred man, he would give a question of state: the answerer said, that the replyer did much wrong the privilege of scholars, who would be much streightened if they should give questions of nothing, but such things wherein they are practised;
and added, we have heard yourself dispute of virtue,
which no man will say you put much in practice.
Bacon.
TO REPO'LISH. v. a. [repolir, Fr. re and

Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.

2. To rest in confidence : with on.
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Shakspeare.
REPO'SE. n. f. [repose, French.]
1. Sleep; rest; quiet.
Merciful pow'rs!
Restrain in me the curst thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakspeare.
Th' hour
Of night, and of all things now retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton.
I all the livelong day
Consume in meditation deep, recluse
From human converse; nor at shut of eve
Enjoy repose. Phillips.
2. Cause of rest.
After great lights must be great shadows, which we call reposes; because in reality the light would be tired, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects.
Dryden.

The father's fortune never to return. Pope.
To REPREHE'ND. v. a. [reprehendo,
Latin.]
1. To reprove; to chide.
All as before his sight, whose presence to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker.
Pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed. Shakspeare
They like dumb statues star'd;
Which when I saw, I reprehended them;
And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? Shakspeare.

Cleanse baits from filth, to give a tempting gloss,
Cherish the sully'd reptile race with moss. Gay.

REPTILE. n. f. An animal that creeps upon many feet.

Terrestrial animals may be divided into quadrupeds or reptiles which have many feet, and serpents which have no feet. Locke.

Holy retreat! fithence no female hither,
Conscious of social love and nature's rites,
Must dare approach, from the inferior reptile,
To woman, form divine. Prior.

REPUBLICAN. adj. [from republick.] Placing the government in the people.

REPUBLICAN. n. f. [from republick.] One who thinks a commonwealth without monarchy the best government.

These people are more happy in imagination than the rest of their neighbours, because they think themselves so; though such a chimerical happiness is not peculiar to republicans. Addison.

REPUBLICK. n. f. [respublica, Latin; republique, Fr.]

1. Commonwealth; state in which the power is lodged in more than one.

They are indebted many millions more than their whole republick is worth. Addison.

2. Common interest; the publick.

Those that by their deeds will make it known,
Whose dignity they do sustain;
And life, state, glory, all they gain,
Count the republick's, not their own. Ben Jonson.

REPU'DIABLE. adj. [from repudiate.] Fit to be rejected.

To REPU'DIATE. v. a. [repudio, Latin; repudier, Fr.] To divorce; to reject; to put away.

Let not those, that have repudiated the more inviting sins, show themselves philtered and bewitched by this. Government of the Tongue.

Here is a notorious instance of the folly of the atheists, that while they repudiate all title to the kingdom of heaven, merely for the present pleasure of body, and their boasted tranquillity of mind, besides the extreme madness in running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that very pleasure and tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.

REPUDIATION. n. f. [repudiation, Fr. from repudiate.] Divorce; rejection.

It was allowed by the Athenians, only in case of repudiation of a wife. Arbutnot.

REPU'GNANCE. } n. f. [repugnance, Fr. from repugnant.]

1. Inconsistency; contrariety.

But where difference is without repugnancy, that which hath been can be no prejudice to that which is. Hooker.

It is no affront to omnipotence, if, by reason of the formal incapacity and repugnancy of the thing, we aver that the world could not have been made from all eternity. Bentley.

2. Reluctance; resistance.

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And let the foes quietly cut their throats,
Without repugnancy? Shakspeare.

3. Struggle of opposite passions.

Thus did the passions act without any of their present jars, combats, or repugnancies, all moving with the beauty of uniformity and the stillness of composure. South.

4. Aversion; unwillingness.

That which causes us to lose most of our time, is the repugnance which we naturally have to labour. Dryden.

REPU'GNANT. adj. [repugnant, Fr. repugnans, Lat.]

Man complete to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.

REPU'LSION. n. f. [repulsus, Lat.] The act or power of driving off from itself.

Air has some degree of tenacity, whereby the parts attract one another; at the same time, by their elasticity, the particles of air have a power of repulsion or flying off from one another. Arbutnot.

REPU'LSIVE. adj. [from repulse.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.

The parts of the salt or vitriol recede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and get as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulsive force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another? Newton.

To REPU'CHASE. v. a. [re and purchase.] To buy again.

Once more we sit on England's royal throne,
Repurchas'd with the blood of enemies;
What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Shakspeare.

If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale.

REPUTABLE. adj. [from repute.] Honourable; not infamous.

If ever any vice shall become reputable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself? Rogers.

In the article of danger, it is as reputable to elude an enemy as defeat one. Broome.

REPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from reputable.] The quality of a thing of good repute.

REPUTABLY. adv. [from reputable.] Without discredit.

To many such worthy magistrates, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse. Atterbury.

REPUTATION. n. f. [reputation, Fr. from repute.]

REQ

1. Character of good or bad.

Verfoy, upon the lake of Geneva, has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison.

2. Credit; honour.

Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving: you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. Shakspeare.

A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes;
At ev'ry word a reputation dies. Pope.

To REPU'TE. v. a. [reputo, Lat. reputer, Fr.] To hold; to account; to think.

The king was reputed a prince most prudent. Shakspeare.

I do repute her grace
The rightful heir to England's royal seat. Shakspeare.

I do know of those,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing. Shakspeare.

Men, such as chuse
Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute
Worse than embrothel'd strumpets prostitute. Donne.

If the grand vizier be so great, as he is reputed, in politicks, he will never consent to an invasion of Hungary. Temple.

REPU'TE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Character; reputation.

2. Established opinion.

He who reigns
Monarch in heav'n, till then as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.

REPU'TELESS. adj. [from repute.] Disreputable; disgraceful. Not inelegant, but out of use.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor livelihood. Shakspeare.

REQUE'ST. n. f. [requeste, Fr.]

1. Petition; entreaty.

But ask what you would have reform'd,
I will both hear and grant you your requests. Shakspeare.

Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther. Esther.

All thy request for man, accepted Son!
Obtain; all thy request was my decree. Milton.

Ask him to lend
To this, the last request that I shall send,
A gentle ear. Denham.

2. Demand; repute; credit; state of being desired.

Aufidius will appear will in these wars, his great opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his country. Shakspeare.

Knowledge and fame were in as great request as wealth among us now. Temple.

To REQUE'ST. v. a. [requester, Fr.] To ask; to solicit; to entreat.

To-night we hold a solemn supper, fir,
And I'll request your presence. Shakspeare.

It was to be requested of Almighty God by prayer, that those kings would seriously fulfil all that hope of peace. Knolles.

The virgin quire for her request,
The god that sits at marriage feast;
He at their invoking came,
But with a scarce well-lighted flame. Milton.

In things not unlawful, great persons cannot be properly said to request, because all things considered, they must not be denied. South.

REQUE'STER. n. f. [from request.] Petitioner; solicitor.

To REQUI'CKEN. v. n. [re and quicken.] To reanimate.

By and by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense, when straight his double spirit
Requicken'd what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the battle came he. Shakspeare.

REQ

REQUIEM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A hymn in which they implore for the dead requiem or rest.

We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a requiem and such peace to her,
As to peace-parted souls. Shakspeare.

2. Rest; quiet; peace. Not in use.

The midwife kneel'd at my mother's throes,
With pain produc'd, and nurs'd for future woes;
Else had I an eternal requiem kept,
And in the arms of peace for ever slept. Sandys.

REQUIRABLE. adj. [from require.] Fit to be required.

It contains the certain periods of times, and all circumstances requirable in a history to inform.

TO REQUIRE. v. a. [requiro, Lat. requerir, French.]

1. To demand; to ask a thing as of right.

Ye me require

A thing without the compass of my wit;
For both the lineage and the certain fire,
From which I sprung, are from me hidden yet.

Spenser.

We do require them of you, so to use them,
As we shall find their merits. Shakspeare.

This, the very law of nature teacheth us to do, and this the law of God requireth also at our hands.

Spelman.

This imply'd

Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway. Milton.

Oft our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd. Dryden.

2. To make necessary; to need.

The king's business required haste. 1 Samuel.
High from the ground, the branches would require
Thy utmost reach. Milton.

But why, alas! do mortal men complain?
God gives us what he knows our wants require,
And better things than those which we desire. Dryden.

God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded man also to labour; and the penury of his condition required it. Locke.

REQUISITE. adj. [requisitus, Lat.] Necessary; needful; required by the nature of things.

When God new-modelled the world by the introduction of a new religion, and that in the room of one set up by himself, it was requisite, that he should recommend it to the reasons of men with the same authority and evidence that enforced the former. South.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. Bacon.

Prepare your soul with all those necessary graces, that are more immediately requisite to this performance. Wake.

REQUISITE. n. f. Any thing necessary.

Res non parva labore, sed reliqua, was thought by a poet to be one of the requisites to a happy life. Dryden.

For want of these requisites, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried up English poet, adore him, and imitate him, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.

God on his part has declared the requisites on ours; what we must do to obtain blessings, is the great business of us all to know. Wake.

REQUISITELY. adv. [from requisite.]

Necessarily; in a requisite manner.

We discern how requisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons, and occurrences. Boyle.

REQUISITENESS. n. f. [from requisite.]

Necessity; the state of being requisite.

Discerning how exquisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to the several times, persons, and occurrences intended, we shall discover not only the sense of the obscurer passages, but the requisiteness of their having been written so obscurely. Boyle.

REQUITAL. n. f. [from requite.]

1. Return for any good or bad office; retaliation.

Should we take the quarrel of sermons in hand, and revenge their cause by requital, thrusting prayer in a manner out of doors under colour of long preaching? Hooker.

RES

Since you

Wear out your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. Shakspeare.

We hear

Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to publick thanks, Forerunning your requital. Shakspeare.

2. Return; reciprocal action.

No merit their aversion can remove,
Nor ill requital can efface their love. Waller.

3. Reward; recompence.

He ask'd me for a song,
And in requital op'd his leathern scrip,
And shew'd me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

I have ta'en a cordial,

Sent by the king or Haly, in requital
Of all my miseries, to make me happy. Denham.

In all the light that the heavens bestow upon this lower world, though the lower world cannot equal their benefaction, yet with a kind of grateful return it reflects those rays, that it cannot recompense; so that there is some return however, though there can be no requital. South.

TO REQUITE. v. a. [requiter, French.]

1. To repay; to retaliate good or ill; to recompense.

If he love me to madness, I shall never requite him. Shakspeare.

An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends. Ecclesiasticus.

Him within protect from harms;
He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these. Milton.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame!

'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from sight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite:

O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake. Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,

Great patriot hero! ill requited chief! Thomson.

2. To do or give in reciprocation.

He hath requited me evil for good. 1 Samuel.

RESCUER. n. f. [from rescue.] One that rescues.

RESEA'CH. n. f. [recherche, Fr.] Inquiry; search.

By a skilful application of those notices, may be gained in such researches the accelerating and bettering of fruits, emptying mines, and draining fens. Glanville.

I submit those mistakes, into which I may have fallen, to the better consideration of others, who shall have made research into this business with more felicity. Holder.

A felicity adapted to every rank, such as the researches of human wisdom sought for, but could not discover. Rogers.

TO RESEA'CH. v. a. [rechercher, Fr.] To examine; to inquire.

It is not easy to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, both how much they may have been blemished by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Wotton.

TO RESEA'T. v. a. [re and seat.] To seat again.

When he's produc'd, will you reseat him
Upon his father's throne? Dryden.

RESEI'ZER. n. f. One that seizes again.

RESEI'ZURE. n. f. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the forfeiture of refeignure: deface the image, and you divest the right. Bacon.

RESEMBLANCE. n. f. [resemblance, Fr.]

1. Likeness; similitude; representation.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryden.
The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it; wherefore we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke.

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,
From the dead ashes of a flow'r,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune. Pope.

2. Something resembling.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fairest resemblance of thy maker fair,
Thee all things living gaze on. Milton.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

TO RESEMBLE. v. a. [resembler, French.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Most safely may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh.

The torrid parts of Africk are resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represents the disperseness of habitations. Brerewood.

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

TO RESEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this same coxcomb,
Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shakspeare.

TO RESENT. v. a. [ressentir, French.]

1. To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to further so hopeful a work. Bacon.

To be absent from any part of publick worship he thus deeply resented. Fell.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn
And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milton.

Such proceedings have been always resented, and often punished in this kingdom. Davenant.

RESENTER. n. f. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Wotton.

RESENTFUL. adj. [resent and full.] Malignant; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.]

1. With deep sense; with strong perception.

2. With continued anger.

RESENTMENT. n. f. [ressentiment, Fr.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality. More.

Some faces we admire and doat on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment; yea, with an invincible disregard. Glanville.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his demonstration is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glanville.

2. Deep sense of injury; anger long continued; sometimes simply anger.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swift.

Though it is hard to judge of the hearts of people, yet where they declare their resentment, and uneasiness at any thing, there they pass the judgment upon themselves. Law.

RESERVATION. n. f. [reservation, Fr.]

1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.

Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I passed that bill, nor repentings after. K. Charles.

We swear with Jesuitical equivocations and mental reservations. Sanderson.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.

Ourself by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Shakspeare.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason. Brown.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.

He will'd me,
In heedful'st reservation, to bestow them
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they of note. Shakspeare.

RESERVATORY. n. f. [reservoir, French.]

Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How I got such notice of that subterranean reservatory as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, peruse the propositions concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

TO RESERVE. v. a. [reserver, Fr. reservo, Latin.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another. Spenser.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble? Job.

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots. 2 Samuel.

Flowers
Reserv'd from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shakspeare.

Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Jeremiah.

3. To lay up to a future time.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Peter.

The breach seems like the scissures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

Conceal your esteem and love in your own breast, and reserve your kind looks and language for private hours. Swift.

RESERVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Store kept untouched, or undiscovered.

The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said: and therefore, though I be beaten, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in reserve behind. Locke.

2. Something kept for exigence.

The virgins, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve in some other vessel for a continual supply. Tillatzen.

Things are managed by advocates, who oftentimes seek conquest, and not justice, and ransack all reserves of law to support an unrighteous cause. Kettlewell.

3. Something concealed in the mind.

However any one may concur in the general scheme, it is still with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private judgment. Addison.

4. Exception; prohibition.

Is knowledge so despis'd?

Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Milton.

5. Exception in favour.

Each has some darling lust, which pleads for a reserve, and which they would fain reconcile to the expectations of religion. Rogers.

6. Modesty; caution in personal behaviour.

Ere guardian thought cou'd bring its scatter'd aid,
My soul surpriz'd, and from herself disjoin'd,
Left all reserve, and all the sex behind. Prior.

RESERVED. adj. [from reserve.]

1. Modest; not loosely free.

To all obliging, yet reserv'd to all,
None could himself the favour'd lover call. Walsh.
Fame is a bubble the reserv'd enjoy,
Who strive to grasp it, as they touch, destroy. Young.

2. Sullen; not open; not frank.

Nothing reserv'd or sullen was to see,
But sweet regards. Dryden.

RESERVEDLY. adv. [from reserved.]

1. Not with frankness; not with openness; with reserve.

I must give only short hints, and write but obscurely and reservedly, until I have opportunity to express my sentiments with greater copiousness and perspicuity. Woodward.

2. Scrupulously; coldly.

He speaks reserv'dly, but he speaks with force;
Nor can a word be chang'd but for a worse. Pope.

RESERVEDNESS. n. f. [from reserved.]

Closeness; want of frankness; want of openness.

Observe their gravity

And their reservedness, their many cautions Fitting their persons. Ben Jonson.

By formality, I mean something more than ceremony and compliment, even a solemn reservedness, which may well consist with honesty. Wotton.

There was great wariness and reservedness, and so great a jealousy of each other, that they had no mind to give or receive visits. Clarendon.

Disimulation can but just guard a man within the compass of his own personal concerns, which yet may be more effectually done by that silence and reservedness, that every man may innocently practise. South.

RESERVER. n. f. [from reserve.] One that reserves.

RESERVOIR. n. f. [reservoir, Fr.] Place where any thing is kept in store.

There is not a spring or fountain, but are well provided with huge cisterns and reservoirs of rain and snow-water. Addison.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;
This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next, a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

TO RESETTLE. v. a. [re and settle.] To settle again.

Will the house of Austria yield the least article, even of usurped prerogative, to resettle the minds of those princes in the alliance, who are alarmed at the consequences of the emperor's death? Swift.

RESETTLEMENT. n. f. [from resettle.]

1. The act of settling again.

To the quieting of my passions, and the resettle- ment of my discomposed soul, I consider that grief is the most absurd of all the passions. Norris.

RES

2. The state of settling again.

Some roll their cask to mix it with the lees, and after a resettlement, they rack it. Mortimer.

RES'ANCE. n. f. [from resiant.] Residence; abode; dwelling. Resiance and resiant are now only used in law.

The king forthwith banished all Flemings out of his kingdom, commanding his merchant adventurers, which had a resiance in Antwerp, to return. Bacon.

In no fix'd place the happy souls reside;

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds. Dryden.

2. [resido, Lat.] To sink; to subside; to fall to the bottom.

Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a drachm of each, turn into a mouldy substance; there residing in the bottom a fair cloud and a thick oil on the top. Boyle.

RESIDENCE. n. f. [residence, French.]

1. Act of dwelling in a place.

Something holy lodges in that breast, And with these raptures moves the vocal air, To testify his hidden residence. Milton.

There was a great familiarity between the confessor and duke William; for the confessor had often made considerable residences in Normandy. Hale.

2. Place of abode; dwelling.

Within the infant rind of this small flower, Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shaksf.

Understand the same Of fish within their wat'ry residence. Milton.

Caprea had been the retirement of Augustus for some time, and the residence of Tiberius for several years. Addison.

3. [from resido, Lat.] That which settles at the bottom of liquors.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the ordinary residence or settlement of liquors. Bacon.

Our clearest waters, and such as seem simple unto sense, are much compounded unto reason, as may be observed in the evaporation of water, wherein, besides a terreous residence, some salt is also found. Brown.

RE'SIDENT. adj. [residens, Latin; resident, French.] Dwelling or having abode in any place.

I am not concerned in this objection; not thinking it necessary, that Christ should be personally present or resident on earth in the millenium. Burnet.

He is not said to be resident in a place, who comes thither with a purpose of retiring immediately; so also he is said to be absent, who is absent with his family. Ayliffe.

RE'SIDENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] An agent, minister, or officer residing in any distant place with the dignity of an ambassador.

The pope fears the English will suffer nothing like a resident or consul in his kingdoms. Addison.

'Tis enough to lose the legacy, or the residuary advantage of the estate left him by the deceased. Ayliffe.

RESIDUE. n. f. [residu, Fr. residuum, Lat.] The remaining part; that which is left.

RES

The causes are all such as expel the most volatile parts of the blood, and fix the residue. Arbutnot.

To RESIE'GE. v. a. [re and siege, French.]

To seat again. Obsolete.

In wretched prison long he did remain, Till they outreigned had their utmost date, And then therein resieged was again, And ruled long with honourable state. Spenser.

To RESIGN. v. a. [resigner, Fr. resigno, Lat.]

1. To give up a claim or possession.

Resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held. Shaksf.

I'll to the king, and signify to him,

That thus I have resign'd to you my charge. Shaksf.

To her thou didst resign thy place. Milton.

Phœbus resigns his darts, and Jove

His thunder, to the god of love. Denham.

Ev'ry Ismena would resign her breast;

And ev'ry dear Hippolytus be blest. Prior.

2. To yield up.

Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial inganations from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity. Brown.

Desirous to resign and render back

All I receiv'd. Milton.

Those, who always resign their judgment to the last man they heard or read, truth never sinks into those men's minds; but, camelion-like, they take the colour of what is laid before them, and as soon lose and resign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.

3. To give up in confidence: with up emphatical.

What more reasonable, than that we should in all things resign up ourselves to the will of God? Tillotson.

4. To submit; particularly to submit to providence.

Happy the man, who studies nature's laws, His mind possessing in a quiet state, Fearless of fortune, and resign'd to fate. Dryden.

A firm, yet cautious, mind,

Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resign'd. Pope.

5. To submit without resistance or murmur.

What thou art, resign to death. Shakspeare.

RESIGNA'TION. n. f. [resignation, Fr.]

1. The act of resigning or giving up a claim or possession.

The resignation of thy state and crown. Shakspeare.

He intended to procure a resignation of the rights of the king's majesty's sisters and others, entitled to the possession of the crown. Hayward.

2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence.

We cannot expect, that any one should readily quit his own opinion, and embrace ours, with a blind resignation to an authority, which the understanding acknowledges not. Locke.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery, that very few will recover themselves out of it. Addison.

3. Submission without murmur to the will of God.

RESIGNER. n. f. [from resign.] One that resigns.

RESIGNMENT. n. f. [from resign.] Act of resigning.

RES'LIENCE. } n. f. [from resilio, Latin.]

RES'LIENCY. } The act of starting or leaping back.

If you strike a ball sidelong, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes, that is, whether a man shall hear better if he stand aside the body repercussing, than if he stand where he speaketh, may be tried. Bacon.

RES'LIENT. adj. [resiliens, Lat.] Starting or springing back.

RESILI'TION. n. f. [resilio, Latin.] The act of springing back; resilience.

RES

RESIN. n. f. [resine, Fr. resina, Latin.]

The fat sulphurous parts of some vegetable, which is natural or procured by art, and will incorporate with oil or spirit, not an aqueous menstruum. Those vegetable substances that will dissolve in water are gums, those that will not dissolve and mix but with spirits or oil are resins. Quincy.

RE'SINOUS. adj. [from resin; resineux, Fr.]

Containing resin; consisting of resin.

Resinous gums, dissolved in spirit of wine, are let fall again, if the spirit be copiously diluted. Boyle.

To RESIST. v. a. [resisto, Latin; resister, French.]

1. To oppose; to act against.

Submit to God: resist the devil, and he will flee. James.

To do ill our sole delight

As being the contrary to his high will.

Whom we resist. Milton.

Not more almighty to resist our might,

Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milt.

Some forms, tho' bright, no mortal man can bear,

Some, none resist, tho' not exceeding fair. Young.

2. To not admit impression or force.

Nor keen nor solid could resist that edge. Milton.

To RESIST. v. n. To make opposition.

All the regions

Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist,

Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,

And perish constant fools. Shakspeare.

RESISTANCE. } n. f. [resistance, French.]

RESISTENCE. } This word, like many others, is differently written, as it is supposed to have come from the Latin or the French.]

1. The act of resisting; opposition.

Demetrius, seeing that the land was quiet, and that no resistance was made against him, sent away all his forces. 1 Maccabees.

2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression.

The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh; for that the flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.

Musick so softens and disarms the mind,

That not an arrow does resistance find. Waller.

The idea of solidity we receive by our touch, and it arises from the resistance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it possesses. Locke.

But that part of the resistance, which arises from the vis inertiae, is proportional to the density of the matter, and cannot be diminished by dividing the matter into smaller parts, nor by any other means, than by decreasing the density of the medium. Newton.

RESISTIBILITY. n. f. [from resistible.]

1. Quality of resisting.

Whether the resistibility of Adam's reason did not equivalence the facility of Eve's seduction, we refer unto schoolmen. Brown.

The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility, together, in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same. Locke.

2. Quality of being resistible.

It is from corruption, and liberty to do evil, meeting with the resistibility of this sufficient grace, that one resists it. Hammond.

RESISTIBLE. adj. [from resist.] That may be resisted.

That is irresistible; this, though potent, yet is in its own nature resistible by the will of man; though it many times prevails by its efficacy. Hale.

RESISTLESS, adj. [from resist.] Irresistible; that cannot be opposed.

Our own eyes do every where behold the sudden and resistless assaults of death. Raleigh.

All at once to force resistless way. Milton.

Since you can love, and yet your error see,

The same resistless power may plead for me. Dryd.

She chang'd her state;

Resistless in her love, as in her hate. Dryden.

Though thine eyes resistless glances dart,

A stronger charm is thine, a generous heart. Logie.

RESOLVABLE, adj. [from resolve.]

1. That may be referred or reduced.

Pride is of such intimate connection with ingratitude, that the actions of ingratitude seem directly resolvable into pride, as the principal reason of them. Soub.

2. Dissoluble; admitting separation of parts.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny like parchment. Arbutnot.

3. Capable of solution, or of being made less obscure.

The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best resolvable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass. Brown.

RESOLUBLE, adj. [resoluble, Fr. re and solubilis, Lat.] That may be melted or dissolved.

Three is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereinto mixt bodies are resoluble by fire. Boyle.

TO RESOLVE, v. a. [resolvo, Latin; resoudre, French.]

1. To inform; to free from a doubt or difficulty.

In all things then are our consciences best resolved, and in most agreeable sort unto God and nature resolved, when they are so far persuaded, as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker.

Give me some breath,

Before I positively speak in this;

I will resolve your grace immediately. Shakspeare.

I cannot brook delay, resolve me now;

And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me. Shaks.

Resolve me, strangers, whence and what you are? Dryden.

2. To solve; to clear.

Examine, sift, and resolve their alleged proofs, till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be inferred upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that some things, which they maintain, do seem to have been out of scripture not absurdly gathered. Hooker.

I resolve the riddle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they do, but what they say. King Charles.

He always bent himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business. Hayward.

The gravers, when they have attained to the knowledge of these repotes, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them. Dryden.

The man who would resolve the work of fate,

May limit number. Prior.

Happiness, it was resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportioned to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune. Rogers.

3. To settle in an opinion.

Good or evil actions, commanded or prohibited by laws and precepts simply moral, may be resolved into some dictates and principles of the law of nature, imprinted on man's heart at the creation. White.

Long since we were resolved of your truth,

Your faithful service, and your toil in war. Shaks.

4. To fix in a determination. This sense is rather neutral, though in these examples the form be passive.

Good proof

This day affords, declaring thee resolv'd

To undergo with me one guilt. Milton.

I run to meet th' alarms,

Resolv'd on death, resolv'd to die in arms. Dryden.

Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack;

Nothing retards thy voyage, unless

Thy other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden.

5. To fix in constancy; to confirm.

Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you

For more amazement:

I'll make the statue move. Shakspeare.

6. To melt; to dissolve.

Resolving is bringing a fluid, which is now concreted, into the state of fluidity again. Arbutnot.

Vegetable salts resolve the coagulated humours of a human body, and attenuate, by stimulating the solids, and dissolving the fluids. Arbutnot.

7. To analyze; to reduce.

Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error? it is altogether unimaginable, but that the reason of so universal a consent should be constant. Tillotson.

Ye immortal souls, who once were men,

And now resolv'd to elements agen. Dryden.

The decretals turn upon this point, and resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome. Baker.

TO RESOLVE, v. n.

1. To determine; to decree within one's self.

Confirm'd, then I resolve

Adam shall share with me. Milton.

Covetousness is like the sea, that receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back; therefore those, who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, have seldom embarked all their hopes in one bottom. Decay of Piety.

2. To melt; to be dissolved.

Have I not hideous death within my view?

Retaining but a quantity of life,

Which bleeds away, ev'n as a form of wax

Resolveth from its figure 'gainst the fire? Shakspeare.

No man condemn me, who has never felt

A woman's power, or try'd the force of love;

All tempers yield and soften in those fires,

Our honours, interests, resolved down,

Run in the gentle current of our joys. Southern.

When the blood stagnates in any part, it first coagulates, then resolves and turns alkaline. Arbutnot.

3. To be settled in opinion.

Let men resolve of that as they please: this every intelligent being must grant, that there is something that is himself, that he would have happy. Locke.

RESOLVE, n. f. [from the verb.] Resolution; fixed determination.

I'm glad, you thus continue your resolve,

To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy. Shakspeare.

When he sees

Himself by dogs, and dogs by men pursu'd,

He strait revokes his bold resolve, and more

Repents his courage, than his fear before. Denham.

Cæsar's approach hath summon'd us together,

And Rome attends her fate from our resolves. Addison.

RESOLVEDLY, adv. [from resolved.] With firmness and constancy.

A man may be resolvedly patient unto death; so that it is not the mediocrity of resolution, which makes the virtue; nor the extremity, which makes the vice. Grew.

RESOLVEDNESS, n. f. [from resolved.] Resolution; constancy; firmness.

This resolvedness, this high fortitude in sin, can with no reason be imagined a preparative to its remission. Decay of Piety.

RESOLVENT, n. f. [resolvens, Lat.] That which has the power of causing solution.

In the beginning of inflammation, they require repellants; and in the increase, somewhat of resolvents ought to be mixed. Wiseman.

Lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, contain wholesome juice, resolvent of the bile, anodyne and cooling. Arbutnot.

RESOLVER, n. f. [from resolve.]

1. One that forms a firm resolution.

Thy resolutions were not before sincere; consequently God that saw that, cannot be thought to have justified that unsincere resolver; that dead faith. Hammond.

2. One that dissolves; one that separates parts.

It may be doubted, whether or no the fire be the genuine and universal resolver of mixed bodies. Boyle.

RESOLUTE, adj. [resolu, Fr.] Determined; fixed; constant; steady; firm.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn

The pow'r of man; for none of woman born

Shall harm Macbeth. Shakspeare.

Edward is at hand

Ready to fight; therefore be resolute. Shakspeare.

RESOLUTELY, adv. [from resolute.] Determinately; firmly; constantly; steadily.

We resolutely must,

To the few virtues that we have, be just. Roscon.

A man, who lives a virtuous life, despises the pleasures of sin, and notwithstanding all the allurements of sense persists resolutely in his course. Tillotson.

Some of those facts he examines, some he resolutely denies; others he endeavours to extenuate, and the rest he distorts with unnatural turns. Swift.

RESOLUTENESS, n. f. [from resolute.] Determinateness; state of being fixed in resolution.

All that my resoluteness to make use of my ears, not tongue, could do, was to make them acquiesce. Boyle.

RESOLUTION, n. f. [resolutio, Lat. resolutio, French.]

1. Act of clearing difficulties.

In matters of antiquity, if their originals escape due relation, they fall into great obscurities, and such as future ages seldom reduce into a resolution. Brown.

Visits, whether of civility, or for resolution of conscience, or information in points of difficulty, were numerous. Pell.

The unravelling and resolution of the difficulties, that are met with in the execution of the design, are the end of an action. Dryden.

2. Analysis; act of separating any thing into constituent parts.

To the present impulses of sense, memory, and instinct, all the sagacities of brutes may be reduced; though witty men, by analytical resolution, have chymically extracted an artificial logick out of all their actions. Hale.

3. Dissolution.

In the hot springs of extreme cold countries, the first heats are unsufferable, which proceed out of the resolution of humidity congealed. Digby.

4. [from resolute.] Fixed determination; settled thought.

I th' progress of this business,

Ere a determinate resolution,

The bishop did require a respite. Shakspeare.

O Lord, resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.

We spend our days in deliberating, and we end them without coming to any resolution. L'Estr.

How much this is in every man's power, by making resolutions to himself, is easy to try. Locke.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubita-

tion, may be called suspension; that which answers to invention, resolution; and that which, in the phantastick will, is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual. Grew.

5. Constancy; firmness; steadiness in good or bad.

The rest of the Helots, which were otherwise scattered, bent thitherward, with a new life of resolution; as if their captain had been a root, out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.

I would unstate myself to be in a due resolution. Shakspeare.

They, who governed the parliament, had the resolution to act those monstrous things. Clarendon.

What reinforcement we may gain from hope,

If not what resolution from despair. Milton.

6. Determination of a cause in courts of justice.

Nor have we all the acts of parliament or of judicial resolutions, which might occasion such alterations. Hale.

RESOLUTIVE, adj. [resolutus, Lat. resolutif, Fr.] Having the power to dissolve or relax.

RESONANCE. n. f. [from resano, Latin.]

The sound of hymns, wherewith thy throne
Incompass'd shall resound thee ever blest. Milton.

3. To sound; to tell so as to be heard far.

The man, for wisdom's various arts renown'd,
Long exercis'd in woes, oh muse! resound. Pope.

TO RESOU'ND. v. n.

1. To be echoed back.

What is common fame, which sounds from all quarters of the world, and resounds back to them again, but generally a loud, rattling, impudent lye? South.

2. To be much and loudly mentioned.

What resounds in fable or romance of Uther's sons. Milton.

RESOU'RCE. n. f. [ressource, French. Skin- ner derives it from resoudre, French, to spring up.] Some new or unexpected means that offer; resort; expedient.

Pallas view'd

His foes pursuing, and his friends pursu'd; Us'd threatnings, mix'd with pray'rs, his last resource;

With these to move their minds, with those to fire their force. Dryden.

TO RESO'W. v. a. [re and sow.] To sow anew.

Over wet at sowing time breedeth much dearth, inasmuch as they are forced to resow summer corn. Bacon.

TO RESPEA'K. v. n. [re and speak.] To answer.

The great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rowse the heav'n shall bruit again,
Respeaking earthly thunder. Shaksp.

TO RESPE'CT. v. a. [respectus, Latin.]

1. To regard; to have regard to.

Claudio, I quake,
Lest thou should'st seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour. Shaksp.

The blest gods do not love
Ungodly actions; but respect the right,
And in the works of pious men delight. Chapman.
In orchards and gardens we do not so much respect beauty, as variety of ground for fruits, trees, and herbs. Bacon.

In judgment-seats, not men's qualities, but causes only ought to be respected. Kettleworth.

2. [respecter, Fr.] To consider with a lower degree of reverence.

There is nothing more terrible to a guilty heart, than the eye of a respected friend. Sidney.
Whoever tastes, let him with grateful heart
Respect that ancient loyal house. Philips.
I always loved and respected sir William. Swift to Gay.

3. To have relation to: as, the allusion respects an ancient custom.

4. To look toward.

The needle doth vary, as it approacheth the pole;
whereas, were there such direction from the rocks, upon a nearer approachment, it would more directly respect them. Brown.

Palladius adviseth, the front of his house should so respect the south, that in the first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof. Brown.

RESPE'CT. n. f. [respect, French; respectus, Latin.]

1. Regard; attention.

You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it, and I do buy it with much care. Shaksp.

I love

My country's good with a respect more tender
Than mine own life. Shaksp.

2. Reverence; honour.

You know me dutiful, therefore Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice. Shaksp.

Aeneas must be drawn a suppliant to Dido, with respect in his gestures, and humility in his eyes. Dryden.

I found the king abandon'd to neglect;
Seen without awe, and serv'd without respect. Prior.
The same men treat the Lord's-day with as little respect, and make the advantage of rest and leisure from their worldly affairs only an instrument to promote their pleasure and diversions. Nelson.

3. Awful kindness.

He, that will have his son have a respect for him, must have a great reverence for his son. Locke.

4. Good-will.

Pembroke has got
A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect;
No other obligation?
That promises more thousands. Shaksp.
The Lord had respect unto Abel and his offering. Genesis.

5. Partial regard.

It is not good to have respect of persons in judment. Pro ver

6. Reverend character.

Many of the best respect in Rome,
Groaning under this age's yoke,
Have wish'd, that noble Brutus had his eye. Shaksp.

7. Manner of treating others.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin to their persons, not errors. Bacon.

The duke's carriage was to the gentlemen of fair respect, and bountiful to the soldier, according to any special value which he spied in any. Wotton.

8. Consideration; motive.

Whatsoever secret respects were likely to move them, for contenting of their minds, Calvin returned. Hooker.

The love of him, and this respect beside;
For that my grandfire was an Englishman,
Awakes my conscience to confess all this. Shaksp.
Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife. Shaksp.

9. Relation; regard.

In respect of the suitors which attend you, do them what right in justice, and with as much speed
as you may. Bacon.

There have been always monsters amongst them,
in respect of their bodies. Wilkins.

I have represented to you the excellency of the christian religion, in respect of its clear discoveries of the nature of God, and in respect of the perfection of its laws. Tillotson.

Every thing which is imperfect, as the world must be acknowledged in many respects, had some cause which produced it. Tillotson.

They believed but one supreme deity, which, with respect to the various benefits men received from him, had several titles. Tillotson.

RESPE'CTABLE. adj. [respectable, Fr.]
Venerable; meriting respect.

RESPE'CTER. n. f. [from respect.] One that has partial regard.

Neither is any condition more honourable in the fight of God than another; otherwise he would be a respector of persons; for he hath proposed the same salvation to all. Swift.

RESPE'CTFUL. adj. [respect and full.]
Ceremonious; full of outward civility.

Will you be only, and for ever mine?
From this dear bosom shall I ne'er be torn?
Or you grow cold, respectful, or forsaken? Prior.
With humble joy, and with respectful fear,
The list'ning people shall his story hear. Prior.

RESPE'CTFULLY. adv. [from respectful.]
With some degree of reverence.

To your glad genius sacrifice this day,
Let common meats respectfully give way. Dryden.

RESPE'CTFULNESS. n. f. [from respect-ful.]
The quality of being respectful.

RESPE'CTIVE. adj. [from respect.]

1. Particular; relating to particular persons or things.

Moses mentions the immediate causes, and St.
Peter the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens, and that constitution of the earth, in reference to their respective waters, which made that world obnoxious to a deluge. Burnet.

When so many present themselves before their respective magistrates to take the oaths, it may not be improper to awaken a due sense of their engagements. Addison.

2. [respectif, Fr.] Relative; not absolute.
The medium intended is not an absolute, but a respective medium; the proportion recommended to all is the same; but the things to be desired in this proportion will vary. Rogers.

3. Worthy of reverence. Not in use.

What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respective in myself? Shaksp.

4. Careful; cautious; attentive to consequences. Obsolete.

Respective, and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pain and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good.

Hooker.

He was exceeding respectively and precise. Raleigh.

RESPECTIVELY. adv. [from respectively.]
1. Particularly; as each belongs to each.

The interruption of trade between the English and Flemish began to pinch the merchants of both nations, which moved them by all means to dispose their sovereigns respectively to open the intercourse again.

Bacon.

The impressions from the objects of the senses do mingle respectively every one with his kind.

Bacon.

Good and evil are in morality, as the east and west are in the frame of the world, founded in and divided by that fixed and unalterable situation, which they have respectively in the whole body of the universe.

South.

The principles of those governments are respectively disclaimed and abhorred by all men of sense and virtue in both parties.

Addison.

2. Relatively; not absolutely.

If there had been no other choice, but that Adam had been left to the universal, Moses would not then have said, eastward in Eden, seeing the world hath not east nor west, but respectively.

Raleigh.

3. Partially; with respect to private views. Obsolete.

Among the ministers themselves, one being so far in estimation above the rest, the voices of the rest were likely to be given for the most part respectively with a kind of secret dependency.

Hooker.

4. With great reverence. Not in use.

Honest Flaminius, you are very respectively welcome.

Shakespeare.

RESPE'RSION. n. f. [respersio, Lat.] The act of sprinkling.

RESPIRA'TION. n. f. [respiration, French; respiratio, from respiro, Latin.]

1. The act of breathing.

Apollonius of Tyana affirmed, that the ebbing and flowing of the sea was the respiration of the world, drawing in water as breath, and putting it forth again.

Bacon.

Syrups or other expectoratives do not advantage in coughs, by slipping down between the epiglottis; for, as I instanced before, that must necessarily occasion a greater cough and difficulty of respiration.

Harvey.

The author of nature foreknew the necessity of rains and dews to the present structure of plants, and the uses of respiration to animals; and therefore created those correspondent properties in the atmosphere.

Bentley.

2. Relief from toil.

Till the day
Appear of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked.

Milton.

TO RESPI'RE. v. n. [respiro, Lat. respirer, French.]

1. To breathe.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire,
The fainty knights were scorch'd.

Dryden.

2. To catch breath.

Till breathless both themselves aside retire,
Where foaming wrath, their cruel tusks they whet,
And trample th' earth the whiles they may respire.

Spenser.

I, a pris'ner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure and sweet,
With day spring born; here leave me to respire.

Milton.

3. To rest; to take rest from toil.

Hark! he strikes the golden lyre;
And see! the tortur'd ghosts respire,
See shady forms advance!

Pope.

RESPI'TE. n. f. [respit, Fr.]

1. Reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence.

I had hope to spend
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day,
That must be mortal to us both.

Milton.

Wisdom and eloquence in vain would plead
One moment's respite for the learned head;
Judges of writings and of men have dy'd.

Prior.

2. Pause; interval.

The fox then counsel'd th' ape, for to require Respite till morrow t' answer his desire.

Spenser.

This customary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little respite or breathing time of peace, doth usually borrow pretence from the necessary, to make itself appear more honest.

Raleigh.

Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire.

Denham.

TO RESPI'TE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To relieve by a pause.

In what bow'r or shade
Thou find'st him, from the heat of noon retir'd,
To respite his day-labour with repast,
Or with repose.

Milton.

2. [respiter, old Fr.] To suspend; to delay.

An act passed for the satisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promised payment, in November following; till which time they were to respite it, and be contented that the common soldiers and inferior officers should be satisfied upon their disbanding.

Clarendon.

RESPLE'NDENCE. n. f. [from resplendens, Lat.]
RESPLE'NDENCY. n. f. [from resplendens, Lat.] Lustre; brightness; splendour.

Son! thou in whom my glory I behold
In full resplendence, heir of all my might.

Milton.

To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion instead of adoring the sun.

Boyle.

RESPLE'NDENT. adj. [resplendens, Lat.]

Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation, resplendent in all glory.

Camden.

There all within full rich array'd he found,
With royal arras and resplendent gold.

Spenser.

The ancient electrum had in it a fifth of silver to the gold, and made a compound metal, as fit for most uses as gold, and more resplendent.

Bacon.

Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve!

Milton.

Every body looks most splendid and luminous in the light of its own colour: cinnabar in the homogeneous light is most resplendent, in the green light it is manifestly less resplendent, in the blue light still less.

Newton.

Resplendent brags, and more resplendent dames.

Pope.

RESPLE'NDENTLY. adv. [from resplendens, Lat.] With lustre; brightly; splendidly.

TO RESPO'ND. v. n. [respondeo, Latin; respondre, Fr.]

1. To answer. Little used.

2. To correspond; to suit.

To ev'ry theme responds thy various lay;
Here rows a torrent, there meanders play.

Broome.

RESPO'NDENT. n. f. [respondens, Lat.]

1. An answerer in a suit.

In giving an answer, the respondent should be in court, and personally admonished by the judge to answer the judge's interrogation.

Ayliffe.

2. One whose province, in a set disputation, is to refute objections.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator? More.
The respondent may easily shew, that though wine may do all this, yet it may be finally hurtful to the soul and body of him.

Watts.

RESPO'NSE. n. f. [responsus, Lat.]

1. An answer; commonly an oraculous answer.

Mere natural piety has taught men to receive the responses of the gods with all possible veneration.

Government of the Tongue.

The oracles, which had before flourished, began to droop, and from giving responses in verse, descended to prose, and within a while were utterly silenced.

Hammond.

2. [respons, Fr.] Answer made by the congregation, speaking alternately with the priest in publick worship.

To make his parishioners kneel and join in the responses he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book.

Addison.

3. Reply to an objection in a formal disputation.

Let the respondent not turn opponent; except in retorting the argument upon his adversary after a direct response; and even this is allowed only as a confirmation of his own response.

Watts.

RESPO'NSIBLE. adj. [from responsus, Lat.]

1. Answerable; accountable.

Heathens, who have certainly the talent of natural knowledge, are responsible for it.

Hammond.

He as much satisfies the itch of telling news; he as much persuades his hearers; and all this while he has h. retreat secure, and stands not responsible for the truth of his relations.

Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Capable of discharging an obligation.

The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writing cannot supply the place of; since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, or that the man bound is honest or responsible.

Locke.

RESPO'NSIBLENESS. n. f. [from responsibile.] State of being obliged or qualified to answer.

RESPO'NSION. n. f. [responsio, Lat.] The act of answering.

RESPO'NSIVE. adj. [responsif, Fr. from responsus, Lat.]

1. Answering; making answer.

A certificate is a responsive letter, or letter by way of answer.

Ayliffe.

2. Correspondent; suited to something else.

Sing of love and gay desire,
Responsive to the warbling lyre.

Fenton.

Be there Demodocus the bard of fame,
Taught by the gods to please, when high he sings
The vocal lay responsive to the strings.

Pope.

RESPO'NSORY. adj. [responsorius, Latin.] Containing answer.

REST. n. f. [neft, Sax. ruste, Dutch.]

1. Sleep; repose.

All things retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose.

Milton.

My tost limbs are wearied into rest.

Pope.

2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.

Of with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
For David left him, when he went to rest,
His lyre.

Dryden.

3. Stillness; cessation or absence of motion.

Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion, which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation.

Bacon.

What cause mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest,
So late to build?

Milton.

All things past are equally and perfectly at rest; and to this way of consideration of them are all one, whether they were before the world, or but yesterday.

Locke.

4. Quiet; peace; cessation from disturbance.

Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

Mattbew.

He giveth you rest from all your enemies.

Deuteronomy.

'Scap'd from such storms of pow'r, holding it best
To be below herself to be at rest.

Daniel.

The root cut off, from whence these tumults rose,

He should have rest, the commonwealth repose.

Daniel.

Thus sent'd, but not at rest or ease of mind.

Milton.

Where can a frail man hide him? in what arms
Shall a short life enjoy a little rest? Fanshawe.
With what a load of vengeance am I prest,
Yet never, never, can I hope for rest;
For when my heavy burden I remove,
The weight falls down, and crushes her I love.

Like the sun, it had light and agility; it knew no rest but in motion, no quiet but in activity. Dryden.

Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go. South.

The grave, where ev'n the great find rest. Pope.

5. Cessation from bodily labour.

There the weary be at rest. Job.
The christian chuseth for his day of rest the first day of the week, that he might thereby profess himself a servant of God, who on the morning of that day vanquish'd Satan. Nelson.

6. Support; that on which any thing leans or rests.

Forth prick'd Clorinda from the throng,
And 'gainst Tancredie set her spear in rest. Fairfax.

A man may think, that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm, as upon a rest; but when all is done, good counsel setteth business straight. Bacon.

Their vizors clos'd, their lances in the rest,
Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest;
They speed the race. Dryden.

Take the handle in your right hand, and clasping the blade of it in your left, lean it steady upon the rest, holding the edge a little aslant over the work, so as a corner of the thin side of the chisel may bear upon the rest, and the flat side of the chisel may make a small angle with the rest. Moxon.

7. Place of repose.

Sustain'd by him with comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home. Milton.

8. Final hope.

Sea fights have been final to the war, but this is,
when princes set up their rest upon the battle. Bacon.
This answer would render their counsels of less reverence to the people, if upon those reasons, they should recede from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demanded of the king; they therefore resolved to set up their rest upon that stake, and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt. Clarendon.

9. [reste, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Remainder; what remains.

Religion gives part of its reward in hand, the present comfort of having done our duty; and for the rest, it offers us the best security that heaven can give. Tillotson.

The pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known,
The rest a huntress. Dryden.

REST. adj. [restes, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Others; those not included in any proposition.

By description of their qualities, many things may be learned concerning the rest of the inhabitants. Abbot.

They had no other consideration of the publick, than that no disturbance might interrupt their quiet in their own days; and that the rest, who had larger hearts and more publick spirits, would extend their labour, activity, and advice only to secure the empire at home by all peaceable arts. Clarendon.

Plato, and the rest of the philosophers, acknowledged the unity, power, wisdom, goodness, and providence of the supreme God. Stillington.

Arm'd like the rest, the Trojan prince appears,
And by his pious labour urges theirs. Dryden.

Upon so equal terms did they all stand, that no one had a fairer pretence of right than the rest. Woodward.

To REST. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sleep; to be asleep; to slumber.

Fancy then retires
Into her private cell, when nature rests. Milton.

2. To sleep the final sleep; to die.

Vol. II.

Κοιμάται ὁ ἄνθρωπος μὴ λέγε τὰς ἀγαθὰς.

Glad I'd lay me down,
As in my mother's lap; there I should rest,
And sleep secure. Milton.

3. To be at quiet; to be at peace; to be without disturbance.

Thither let us tend
From off the tossing of these fiery waves,
There rest, if any rest can harbour there. Milton.

4. To be without motion; to be still.

Over the tent a cloud shall rest by day. Milton.

5. To be fixed in any state or opinion.

He will not rest content, though thou givest many gifts. Proverbs.

Every creature has a share in the common blefsings of providence; and every creature should rest well satisfied with its proportion in them. L'Estrange.

After such a lord I rest secure,
Thou wilt no foreign reins or Trojan load endure. Dryden.

There yet survives the lawful heir
Of Sancho's blood, whom, when I shall produce,
I rest assur'd to see you pale with fear. Dryden.

6. To cease from labour.

Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest. Exodus.

The ark went before, to search out a resting place for them. Numbers.

From work
Resting, he blest'd the seventh day. Milton.

When you enter into the regions of death, you rest from all your labours and your fears. Taylor.

7. To be satisfied; to acquiesce.

To urge the foe to battle,
Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse th' awards of providence,
And not to rest in heaven's determination. Addison.

8. To lean; to recline for support or quiet.

On him I rested,

And, not without consid'ring, fix'd my fate. Dryden.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, when testimony of right has nothing to do; because it is easier to believe, than to be scientifically instructed. Locke.

The philosophical use of words conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may rest upon,
and be satisfied with, in its search after knowledge. Locke.

9. [resto, Lat. restor, Fr.] To be left; to remain.

Fall'n he is; and now
What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass
On his transgression? Milton.

There rests the comparative; that is, its being granted, that it is either lawful or binding, yet whether other things be not preferred before it, as extirpation of heresies. Bacon.

To REST. v. a.

1. To lay to rest.

Your piety has paid
All needful rites, to rest my wand'ring shade. Dryden.

2. To place as on a support.

As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last,
Itself into Augustus' arms did cast;
So England now doth, with like toil oppress,
Her weary head upon your bosom rest. Waller.

The protestants having well studied the fathers, were now willing to rest their cause, not upon scripture only, but fathers too; so far at least as the three first centuries. Waterland.

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown. Gray.

RESTA'GNANT. adj. [restagnans, Latin.]

Remaining without flow or motion.

Upon the tops of high mountains, the air, which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed by the less ponderous incumbent air. Boyle.

To RESTA'GNATE. v. n. [re and stagnate.]

To stand without flow.

The blood returns thick, and is apt to restagnate. Wijeman.

RESTAGNA'TION. n. s. [from restagnate.]

The state of standing without flow, course, or motion.

RESTAURA'TION. n. s. [restauratio, Latin.]

The act of recovering to the former state.

Adam is in us an original cause of our nature, and of that corruption of nature which causeth death; Christ as the cause original of restoration to life. Hooker.

O my dear father! restoration hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shakspeare.

Spermatical parts will not admit a regeneration, much less will they receive an integral restoration to life. Brown.

To RESTE'M. v. a. [re and stem.] To force back against the current.

How they restem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance Toward Cyprus. Shakspeare.

RESTFUL. adj. [rest and full.] Quiet; being at rest.

Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court,
As far as Calais to my uncle's head? Shakspeare.

RESTHARROW. n. s. A plant.

RESTIFF. adj. [restif, Fr. restivo, Ital.]

1. Unwilling to stir; resolute against going forward; obstinate; stubborn. It is originally used of a horse, that, though not wearied, will not be driven forward.

All, who before him did ascend the throne,
Labour'd to draw three restive nations on. Roscom.

This restiff stubbornness is never to be excused under any pretence whatsoever. L'Estrange.

Some, with studious care,
Their restiff steeds in sandy plains prepare. Dryden.

The archangel, when discord was restive, and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, drags her out with many stripes. Dryden.

So James the drowsy genius wakes
Of Britain, long entranc'd in charms,
Restiff, and slumb'ring on its arms. Dryden.

The pamp'ring colt will discipline disdain,
Impatient of the lash, and restiff to the rein. Dryden.

2. Being at rest; being less in motion. Not used.

Palsies ofteneft happen upon the left side; the most vigorous part protecting itself, and protruding the matter upon the weaker and restive side. Brown.

RESTIVENESS. n. s. [from restif.] Obstinate reluctance.

Overt virtues bring forth praise; but secret virtues bring forth fortune: certain deliveries of a man's self, which the Spanish name desemboltura, partly expresseth, where there be not stands nor restiveness in a man's nature; but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune. Bacon.

That it gave occasion to some men's further restiveness, is imputable to their own depraved tempers. King Charles.

RESTI'NCTION. n. s. [restringens, Latin.]

The act of extinguishing.

RESTITU'TION. n. s. [restitutio, Latin.]

1. The act of restoring what is lost or taken away.

To subdue an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise or wrongful war, but a restitution of ancient rights unto the crown of England, from whence they were most unjustly expelled and long kept out. Spencer.

He would pawn his fortunes
To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakspeare.

He restitution to the value makes;
Nor joy in his extorted treasure takes. Sandys.

Whoever is an effective real cause of doing a neighbour wrong, by what instrument soever he does it, is bound to make restitution. Taylor.

In case our offence against God hath been complicated with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution. Tillotson.

A great man, who has never been known willingly to pay a just debt, ought not all of a sudden to be introduced, making restitution of thousands.

he has cheated: let it suffice to pay twenty pounds to a friend, who has lost his note. Arbutnot.

2. The act of recovering its former state or posture.

In the woody parts of plants, which are their bones, the principles are so compounded, as to make them flexible without joints, and also elastick; that so their roots may yield to stones, and their trunks to the wind, with a power of restitution. Grew.

RESTLESSLY. adv. [from restless.] Without rest; unquietly.

When the mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, strains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, another to divide, a fourth to remember; thus tracing out the nice and scarce observable difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together. South.

RESTLESSNESS. n. f. [from restless.]

1. Want of sleep.

Restlessness and intermission from sleep, grieved persons are molested with, whereby the blood is dried. Harvey.

2. Want of rest; unquietness.

Let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness;
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to my breast. Herbert.

I sought my bed, in hopes relief to find,
But restlessness was mistress of my mind. Harte.

3. Motion; agitation.

The trembling restlessness of the needle, in any but the north point of the compass, manifests its inclination to the pole; which its wavering and its rest bear equal witness to. Boyle.

RESTLESS. adj. [from rest.]

1. Being without sleep.

Restless he pass'd the remnants of the night,
Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning nigh:
And burning ships, the martyrs of the fight,
With paler fires beheld the eastern sky. Dryden.

2. Unquiet; without peace.

Ease to the body some, none to the mind
From restless thoughts, that like a deadly swarm
Of hornets arm'd, no sooner found alone,
But rush upon me thronging, and present
Times past, what once I was, and what I'm now. Milton.

Could we not wake from that lethargick dream,
But to be restless in a worse extreme? Denham.
We find our souls disordered and restless, tossed and disquieted by passions, ever seeking happiness in the enjoyments of this world, and ever missing what they seek. Atterbury.

What tongue can speak the restless monarch's woes,
When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes? Prior.

3. Unconstant; unsettled.

He was stout of courage, strong of hand,
Bold was his heart, and restless was his spright. Fairfax.

He's proud, fantastick, apt to change,
Restless at home, and ever prone to range. Dryden.

4. Not still; in continual motion.

How could nature on their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day
Repeated? Milton.

RESTORABLE. adj. [from restore.] What may be restored.

By cutting turf without any regularity, great quantities of restorable land are made utterly desperate. Swift.

RESTORATION. n. f. [from restore; restauratio, Fr.]

1. The act of replacing in a former state.

This is properly restoration.
Hail, royal Albion, hail to thee,
Thy longing people's expectation!
Sent from the gods to set us free
From bondage and from usurpation:
Behold the different climes agree,
Rejoicing in thy restoration. Dryden.

The Athenians, now deprived of the only person that was able to recover their losses, repent of their rashness, and endeavour in vain for his restoration. Swift.

2. Recovery.

The change is great in this restoration of the man, from a state of spiritual darkness, to a capacity of perceiving divine truth. Rogers.

RESTORATIVE. adj. [from restore.] That has the power to recruit life.

Their taste no knowledge works at least of evil;
But life preserves, destroys life's enemy,
Hunger, with sweet restorative delight. Milton.

RESTORATIVE. n. f. [from restore.] A medicine that has the power of recruiting life.

I will kiss thy lips;
Haply some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative. Shakspeare.

God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance, to make the weakness of the flesh, the physick and restorative of the spirit. South.

Asses milk is an excellent restorative in consumptions. Mortimer.

He prescribes an English gallon of asses milk, especially as a restorative. Arbutnot.

To RESTORE. v. a. [restaurer, Fr. restaurer, Latin.]

1. To give back what has been lost or taken away.

Restore the man his wife. Genesis.

She lands him on his native shores,
And to his father's longing arm restores. Dryden.

2. To bring back.

The father banish'd virtue shall restore,
And crimes shall threat the guilty world no more. Dryden.

Thus pencils can, by one slight touch, restore Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.

3. To retrieve; to bring back from degeneration, declension, or ruin, to its former state.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man Restore it, and regain the blissful seat. Milton.
Th' archangel paus'd
Between the world destroy'd and world restor'd. Milton.

These artificial experiments are but so many essays, whereby men attempt to restore themselves from the first general curse inflicted upon their labours. Wilkins.

In his Odyssseys, Homer explains, that the hardest difficulties may be overcome by labour, and our fortune restored after the severest afflictions. Prior.

4. To cure; to recover from disease.

Garth, faster than a plague destroys, restores. Granville.

5. To recover passages in books from corruption.

RESTORER. n. f. [from restore.] One that restores; one that recovers the lost, or repairs the decayed.

Next to the Son,
Destin'd restorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise. Milton.

I foretel you, as the restorer of poetry. Dryden.
Here are ten thousand persons reduced to the necessity of a low diet and moderate exercise, who are the only great restorers of our breed, without which, the nation would in an age become one great hospital. Swift.

To RESTRAIN. v. a. [restreindre, Fr. restringo, Latin.]

1. To withhold; to keep in.

If the restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'Tis to such wholesome end as clears her. Shakspeare.
The gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs. Shakspeare.

2. To repress; to keep in awe.

The law of nature would be in vain, if there were no body that, in the state of nature, had a power to execute that law, and thereby preserve the innocent and restrain offenders. Locke.

That all men may be restrained from doing hurt to one another, the execution of the law of nature is in that state put into every man's hand, whereby every one has a right to punish the transgressors to such a degree as may hinder its violation. Locke.

3. To suppress; to hinder; to repress.

Merciful pow'rs!
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakspeare.

Compassion gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milton.

4. To abridge.

Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance. Shakspeare.

Though they two were committed, at least restrained of their liberty, yet this discovered too much of the humour of the court. Clarendon.

5. To hold in.

His horse, with a half checked bit, and a head-stall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots. Shakspeare.

6. To limit; to confine.

We restrain it to those only duties, which all men, by force of natural wit, understand to be such duties as concern all men. Hooker.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute? South.

Not only a metaphysical or natural, but a moral universality also is to be restrained by a part of the predicate; as all the Italians are politicians; that is, those among the Italians, who are politicians, are subtle politicians; i. e. they are generally so. Watts.

RESTRAINABLE. adj. [from restrain.] Capable to be restrained.

Therein we must not deny a liberty; nor is the hand of the painter more restrainable, than the pen of the poet. Brown.

RESTRAIN'DLY. adv. [from restrained.] With restraint; without latitude.

That Christ's dying for all is the express doctrine of the scripture, is manifested by the world, which is a word of the widest extent, and although it be sometimes used more restrainedly, yet never doth signify a far smaller disproportionable part of the world. Hammond.

RESTRAINER. n. f. [from restrain.] One that restrains; one that withholds.

If nothing can relieve us, we must with patience submit unto that restraint, and expect the will of the restrainer. Brown.

RESTRAINT. n. f. [from restrain; restraint, French.]

1. Abridgment of liberty.

She will well excuse,
Why at this time the doors are barr'd against you:
Depart in patience,
And about evening come yourself alone,
To know the reason of this strange restraint. Shakspeare.

I request
Th' enfranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint
Doth move the murmur'ing lips of discontent. Shakspeare.

It is to no purpose to lay restraints or give privileges to men, in such general terms, as the particular persons concerned cannot be known by. Locke.

I think it a manifest disadvantage, and a great restraint upon us. Felton.

2. Prohibition.

What mov'd our parents to transgress his will
For one restraint, lord of the world besides? Milton.

3. Limitation; restriction.

If all were granted, yet it must be maintain'd within any bold restraints, far otherwise than it received. Brown.

4. Repression; hinderance of will; act of withholding; state of being withheld.

There is no restraint to the Lord to save, by man or by few. 1 Samuel.

Thus it shall befall

Him who, to worth in woman overtrusting,
Lest her will rule; restraint she will not brook. Milt.

Is there any thing, which reflects a greater lustre upon a man's person, than a severe temperance, and a restraint of himself from vicious pleasures? South.

RESTRICT. v. a. [restrictus, Latin.]

To limit; to confine. A word scarce English.

In the enumeration of constitutions in this chapter, there is not one that can be limited and restricted by such a distinction, nor can perhaps the same person, in different circumstances, be properly confined to one or the other. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTION. n. f. [restriction, French.]

Confinement; limitation.

This is to have the same restriction with all other recreations, that it be made a divertisement, not a trade. Government of the Tongue.

Iron manufacture, of all others, ought the least to be encouraged in Ireland; or, if it be, it requires the most restriction to certain places. Temple.

All duties are matter of conscience; with this restriction, that a superior obligation suspends the force of an inferior. L'Estrange.

Each other gift, which God on man bestows, its proper bounds and due restriction knows;

To one fix'd purpose dedicates its power. Prior.

Celsus's rule, with the proper restrictions, is good for people in health. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTIVE. adj. [from restrict.]

1. Expressing limitation.

They, who would make the restrictive particle belong to the latter clause, and not to the first, do not attend to the reason. Stillingfleet.

2. [restrictif, French.] Styptick; astringent.

I applied a plaister over it, made up with my common restrictive powder. Wiseman.

RESTRICTIVELY. adv. [from restrictive.]

With limitation.

All speech, tending to the glory of God, or the good of man, is aright directed; which is not to be understood so restrictively, as if nothing but divinity or necessary concerns of life, may lawfully be brought into discourse. Government of the Tongue.

RESTRI'NGE. v. a. [restringo, Latin.]

To confine; to contract; to astringe.

RESTRI'NGENT. n. f. [restringens, Latin; restringent, French.] That which hath the power of contracting; styptick.

RESTY. adj. [restif, French.] Obstinate in standing still. See RESTIFF.

Come, our stomachs

Will make what's homely savoury, weariness

Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth

Finds the down pillow hard. Shakspeare.

Have not other hands been tried and found resty?

but we stick at nothing. Davenant.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

TO RESUBLI'ME. v. a. [re and sublime.]

To sublime another time.

When mercury sublimate is resublimed with fresh mercury, it becomes mercurius dulcis, which is a white tasteless earth scarce dissolvable in water, and mercurius dulcis resublimed with spirit of salt returns into mercury sublimate. Newton.

TO RESUL'T. v. n. [resulter, French; resulto, Latin.]

1. To fly back.

With many a weary step, and many a groan,
Up the high hill he heaves a huge round stone;
The huge round stone, resulting with a bound,
Thunders impetuous down, and smoaks along the ground. Pope.

2. [resulter, French.] To rise as a consequence; to be produced as the effect of causes jointly concurring.

Rue prospers much, if set by a fig-tree; which is caused, not by reason of friendship, but by extraction of a contrary juice; the one drawing juice fit to result sweet, the other bitter. Bacon.

Such huge extremes, when nature doth unite,
Wonder from thence results, from thence delight. Denham.

Upon the dissolution of the first earth, this very face of things would immediately result. Burnet.

Pleasure and peace do naturally result from a holy and good life. Tillotson.

The horror of an object may overbear the pleasure resulting from its greatness. Addison.

Their effects are often very disproportionable to the principles and parts that result from the analysis. Baker.

3. To arise as a conclusion from premises.

RESUL'T. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Resilience; act of flying back.

Sound is produced between the string and the air, by the return of the result of the string, which was strained by the touch to his former place. Bacon.

2. Consequence; effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes.

Did my judgment tell me, that the propositions sent to me were the results of the major part of their votes, I should then not suspect my own judgment for not speedily concurring with them. King Charles.

As in perfumes, compos'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost,
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all:

So she was all a sweet, whose ev'ry part,
In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's art. Dryden.

Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain: men in trade seldom lay out money upon land, till their profit has brought in more than trade can employ. Locke.

3. Inference from premises.

These things are a result or judgment upon fact. South.

4. Resolve; decision. Improper.

Rude, passionate, and mistaken results have, at certain times, fallen from great assemblies. Swift.

RESUL'TANCE. n. f. [resultance, French.]

The act of resulting.

RESU'MABLE. adj. [from resume.] What may be taken back.

This was but an indulgence, and therefore resumable by the victor, unless there intervened any capitulation to the contrary. Hale.

TO RESU'ME. v. a. [resumo, Latin.]

1. To take back what has been given.

The sun, like this, from which our light we have,
Gaz'd on too long, resumes the light he gave. Denb.

Sees not my love, how time resumes

The glory which he lent these flow'rs;

Though none should taste of their perfumes,

Yet must they live but some few hours:

Time, what we forbear, devours. Waller.

2. To take back what has been taken away.

That opportunity,

Which then they had to take from's, to resume

We have again. Shakspeare.

They resume what has been obtained fraudulently,

by surprise and upon wrong suggestions. Davenant.

3. To take again.

He'll enter into glory, and resume his seat. Milt.

At this, with look serene, he rais'd his head,
Reason resum'd her place and passion fled. Dryden.

4. Dryden uses it with again, but improperly, unless the resumption be repeated.

To him our common grandfire of the main
Had giv'n to change his form, and chang'd, resume

again. Dryden.

5. To begin again what was broken off: as, to resume a discourse.

RESU'MPTION. n. f. [resumption, French; resumptus, Latin.] The act of resuming.

If there be any fault, it is the resumption or the dwelling too long upon his arguments. Denham.

The universal voice of the people seeming to call for some kind of resumption, the writer of these papers thought it might not be unseasonable to publish a discourse upon grants. Davenant.

RESU'MPTIVE. adj. [resumptus, Latin.]

Taking back.

RESUPINA'TION. n. f. [resupino, Latin.]

The act of lying on the back.

TO RESURVEY. v. a. [re and survey.]

To review; to survey again.

I have, with cursory eye, o'erglanc'd the articles;
Appoint some of your council presently

To sit with us, once more with better heed
To resurvey them. Shakspeare.

RESURRECTION. n. f. [resurrection, Fr. resurrectum, Latin.] Revival from the dead; return from the grave.

The Sadducees were grieved, that they taught, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. Acts.

Nor after resurrection shall he stay Longer on earth, than certain times t' appear

To his disciples. Milton.

He triumphs in his agonies, whilst the soul springs forward to the great object which she has always had in view, and leaves the body with an expectation of being remitted to her in a glorious and joyful resurrection. Spectator.

Perhaps there was nothing ever done in all past ages, and which was not a publick fact, so well attested as the resurrection of Christ. Watts.

TO RESU'SCITATE. v. a. [resuscito, Latin.] To stir up anew; to revive.

We have beasts and birds for dissections, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth, resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance. Bacon.

RESUSCITA'TION. n. f. [from resuscitate.]

The act of stirring up anew; the act of reviving, or state of being revived.

Your very obliging manner of enquiring after me, at your resuscitation, should have been sooner answered; I sincerely rejoice at your recovery. Pope.

TO RETAIL. v. a. [retailer, French.]

1. To sell in small quantities, in consequence of selling at second hand.

All encouragement should be given to artificers; and those, who make, should also vend and retail their commodities. Locke.

2. To sell at second hand.

The sage dame,
By names of toasts, retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

3. To tell in broken parts, or at second hand.

He is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me. Shakspeare.

Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;

To whom I will retail my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar. Shakspeare.

RETAI'L. n. f. [from the verb.] Sale by small quantities, or at second hand.

The author, to prevent such a monopoly of sense, is resolv'd to deal in it himself by retail. Addison.

We force a wretched trade by beating down the sale,

And selling basely by retail. Swift.

RETAI'LER. n. f. [from retail.] One who sells by small quantities.

From these particulars we may guess at the rest, as retailers do of the whole piece, by taking a view of its ends. Hakewill.

TO RETAIN. v. a. [retineo, Lat. retiner, French.]

1. To keep; not to lose.

Where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain? Shakspeare.

Though th' offending part felt mortal pain,

Th' immortal part its knowledge did retain. Denb.

The vigour of this arm was never vain;

And that my wonted prowess I retain,

Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.

A tomb and fun'ral honours I decreed

The place your armour and your name retains. Dryden.

RET

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it is reasonable to conclude, it can retain without the help of the body too. Locke.

2. To keep; not to lay aside.

Let me retain

The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, beloved sons, be yours. Shakspeare.
As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind. Romans.

Be obedient, and retain Unalterably firm his love entire. Milton.

Although they retain the word mandrake in the text, yet they retract it in the margin. Brown.
They who have restored painting in Germany, not having seen any of those fair reliques of antiquity, have retained much of that barbarous method. Dryd.

3. To keep; not to dismiss.

Receive him that is mine own bowels; whom I would have retained with me. Philemon.

Hollow rocks retain
The sound of blustering winds. Milton.

4. To keep in pay; to hire.

A Benedictine convent has now retained the most learned father of their order to write in its defence. Addison.

To RETAIN. v. n.

1. To belong to; to depend on.

These betray upon the tongue no heat nor corrosiveness, but coldness mixed with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness. Boyle.

In animals many actions depend upon their living form, as well as that of mixtion, and though they wholly seem to retain to the body, depart upon dissolution. Brown.

2. To keep; to continue. Not in use. Perhaps it should be remain.

No more can impure man retain and move
In the pure region of that worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

RETAINER. n. f. [from retain.]

1. An adherent; a dependant; a hanger-on.

You are now mounted,
Where pow'rs are your retainers. Shakspeare.
One darling inclination of mankind affects to be a retainer to religion; the spirit of opposition, that lived long before christianity, and can easily subsist without it. Swift.

A combination of honest men would endeavour to extirpate all the profligate immoral retainers to each side, that have nothing to recommend them but an implicit submission to their leaders. Addison.

2. In common law, retainer signifieth a servant not menial nor familiar, that is not dwelling in his house; but only using or bearing his name or livery. Corwell.

3. The act of keeping dependants, or being in dependance.

By another law, the king's officers and farmers were to forfeit their places and holds, in case of unlawful retainer, or partaking in unlawful assemblies. Bacon.

To RETAKE. v. a. [re and take.] To take again.

A day shall be appointed, when the remonstrance should be retaken into consideration. Clarendon.

To RETALIATE. v. a. [re and talio, Latin.] To return by giving like for like; to repay; to requite: it may be used of good or evil.

It is very unlucky, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of authors, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger of appearing the first aggressors. Swift.

If a first minister of state had used me as you have done, retaliating would be thought a mark of courage. Swift.

RETALIATION. n. f. [from retaliate.]

Requit; return of like for like.

They thought it no irreligion to prosecute the severest retaliation or revenge; so that at the same time their outward man might be a saint, and their inward man a devil. South.

RET

God, graciously becoming our debtor, takes what is done to others as done to himself, and by promise obliges himself to full retaliation. Calamy.

To RETARD. v. a. [retardo, Latin; retarder, French.]

1. To hinder; to obstruct in swiftness of course.

How Iphitus with me, and Pelias Slowly retire; the one retarded was
By feeble age, the other by a wound. Denham.

2. To delay; to put off.

Nor kings nor nations
One moment can retard th' appointed hour. Dryden.
It is as natural to delay a letter at such a season, as to retard a melancholy visit to a person one cannot relieve. Pope.

To RETARD. v. n. To stay back.

Some years it hath also retarded, and come far later, than usually it was expected. Brown.

RETARDATION. n. f. [retardation, Fr. from retard.] Hinderance; the act of delaying.

Out of this a man may devise the means of altering the colour of birds, and the retardation of hoary hairs. Bacon.

RETARDER. n. f. [from retard.] Hinderer; obstructer.

This disputing way of enquiry is so far from advancing science, that it is no inconsiderable retarder. Glanville.

RETCHLESS. adj. [sometimes written wretchless, properly reckless. See RECKLESS.] Careless.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began;
Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone. Dryden.

RETECTION. n. f. [retectus, Latin.] The act of discovering to the view.

This is rather a restoration of a body to its own colour, or a retection of its native colour, than a change. Boyle.

RETENTION. n. f. [retention, French; retentio, from retentus, Latin.]

1. The act of retaining; the power of retaining.

No woman's heart
So big to hold so much; they lack retention. Shak.
A forward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as an innovation; and they that reverence too much old things, are but a scorn to the new. Bacon.

2. Retention and retentive faculty is that state of contraction in the solid parts, which makes them hold fast their proper contents. Quincy.

3. Memory.

The backward learner makes amends another way, expiating his want of docility with a deeper and a more rooted retention. South.

Retention is the keeping of those simple ideas, which from sensation or reflection the mind hath received. Locke.

4. The act of withholding any thing.

His life I gave him, and did thereto add
My love without retention or restraint;
All his. Shakspeare.

5. Custody; confinement; restraint.

I sent the old and miserable king,
To some retention and appointed guard. Shakspeare.

RETENTIVE. adj. [retentus, Lat. retentif, French.]

1. Having the power of retention.

It keepeth sermons in memory, and doth in that respect, although not feed the soul of man, yet help the retentive force of that stomach of the mind. Hooker.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakspeare.

RET

From retentive cage

When sullen Philomel escapes, her notes
She varies, and of past imprisonment Sweetly complains. Philips.

In Tot'nam fields the brethren with amaze
Prick all their ears up, and forget to graze;
Long Chancery-lane retentive rolls the sound,
And courts to courts return it round and round. Pope.

2. Having memory.

To remember a song or tune, our souls must be an harmony continually running over in a silent whisper those musical accents, which our retentive faculty is preserver of. Glanville.

RETENTIVENESS. n. f. [from retentive.]

The quality of retention.

RETICENCE. n. f. [reticence, French; reticentia, from reticeo, Latin.] Concealment by silence. DiE.

You made my liberty your late request:
Is no return due from a grateful breast?
I grow impatient, till I find some way,
Great offices, with greater to repay. Dryden.
Since these are some of the returns which we made to God after obtaining our successes, can we reasonably presume, that we are in the favour of God? Atterbury.
Nothing better becomes a person in a publick character, than such a publick spirit; nor is there any thing likely to procure him larger returns of esteem. Atterbury.
Returns, like these, our mistress bids us make,
When from a foreign prince a gift her Britons take.
Prior.
Ungrateful lord!
Would'st thou invade my life, as a return
For proffer'd love? Rowe.

Light was the wound, the prince's care unknown,
She might not, would not yet reveal her own.
Waller.
The answer to one who asked what time was, si non rogas intelligo; that is, the more I think of time, the less I understand it; might persuade one, that time, which reveals all other things, is itself not to be discovered. Locke.
Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight;
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no further than thyself reveal'd.
Dryden.
 2. To impart from heaven.
The sufferings of this life are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.
Romans.
- REVEA'LER. n. f. [from reveal.]

known.
The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, as a stable assent unto things in-evident, upon authority of the divine revealer.
Brown.
The lives of the revealers may be justly set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree.
Atterbury.
 2. One that discovers to view.
He brought a taper; the revealer light
Expos'd both crime and criminal to sight. Dryden.
- TO RE'VEL. v. n. [Skinner derives it from reveiller, French, to awake; Lye from raveelen, Dutch, to rove loosely about, which is much countenanced by the old phrase, revel-rout.] To feast with loose and clamorous merriment.
My honey love,
Will we return unto thy father's house,
And revel it as bravely as the best. Shakspere.
We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two.
Tybalt being slain so late,
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakspere.
Antony, that revels long o'nights,
Is up. Shakspere.
We shall have revelling to-night;
I will assume thy part in some disguise. Shakspere.
He can report you more odd tales
Of our outlaw Robin Hood,
That revell'd here in Sherewood,
Though he ne'er shot in his bow. Ben Jonson.
Were the doctrine new,
That the earth mov'd, this day would make it true;
For every part to dance and revel goes,
They tread the air, and fall not where they rose.
Donne.

R E V

- Whene'er I revel'd in the women's bow'rs;
For first I sought her but at looser hours:
The apples she had gather'd smelt most sweet. Prior.
- RE'VEL. n. f. [from the verb.] A feast with loose and noisy jollity.
Let them pinch th' unclean knight,
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread? Shaksp.
They could do no less but, under your fair conduct,
Crave leave to view these ladies, and intreat
An hour of revels with them. Shakspere.
- TO RE'VEL. v. a. [revello, Latin.] To retract; to draw back.
Those, who miscarry, escape by their flood,
revelling the humours from their lungs. Harvey.

The gods are just, and will revenge our cause.
Dryden.
 3. To wreak one's wrongs on him that inflicted them. With the reciprocal pronoun, or in a passive sense.
Come, Antony and young Octavius, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius. Shakspere.
It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee. Shaksp.
Northumberland slew thy father;
And thine, lord Clifford; and you vow'd revenge:
If I be not, heav'n's be reveng'd on me! Shaksp.
Edom hath revenged himself upon Judah.
Ezekiel.
O Lord, visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors. Jeremiah.
Who shall come to stand against thee, to be revenged for the unrighteous men? Wisdom.
Your fury of a wife,
Not yet content to be reveng'd on you,
Th' agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden.
- REVE'NGE. n. f. [revanche, revanche, Fr.]
1. Return of an injury.

May we, with the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with further revenge. Shakspeare.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood; from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. Deuter.
Deformed persons are commonly even with nature;
for as nature has done ill by them, so they do by nature; being void of natural affection; they have their revenge of nature. Bacon.

What will not ambition and revenge descend to?
Milton.

The satyr in a rage
Forgets his bus'ness is to laugh and bite,
And will of death and dire revenges write. Dryden.
Draco, the Athenian law-giver, granted an impunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer. Broome.

2. The passion of vengeance; desire of hurting one from whom hurt has been received.

Revenge burn in them: for their dear causes
Would, to the bleeding and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man. Shakspeare.

3. Revenge is an act of passion; vengeance of justice. Injuries are revenged, crimes are avenged. This distinction is perhaps not always preserved.

REVENGEFUL. adj. [from revenge.] Vindictive; full of revenge; full of vengeance.

May my hands
Never brandish more vengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe. Shakspeare.
If thy vengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword,
Which hide in this true breast. Shakspeare.

Into my borders now Jarbas falls,
And my vengeful brother scates the walls. Denb.
Repenting England, this vengeful day,
To Philip's manes did an off'ring bring. Dryden.

REVENGEFULLY. adv. [from vengeful.] Vindictively.

He smil'd vengefully, and leap'd
Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
Gods I accuse you not. Dryden.

REVENGER. n. s. [from revenge.]

1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.

May be, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenger's heat; words, well dispos'd,
Have secret pow'r to appease enflamed rage. Spenser.
I do not know,

Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends. Shakspeare.

So shall the great revenger ruin
Him and his issue, by a dreadful fate. Sandys.
Morocco's monarch

Had come in person, to have seen and known
The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.

2. One who punishes crimes.

What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of judicature, without a religious oath, which supposes an omniscient being, as conscious to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury? Bentley.

REVENGEMENT. n. s. [from revenge.]
Vengeance; return of an injury.

It may dwell
In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
And be for all chaste dames an endless monument. Spenser.

By the perclose of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travelleth in fear of revengement. Raleigh.

REVENGINGLY. adv. [from revenging.]
With vengeance; vindictively.

I've bely'd a lady,
The princess of this country; and the air on't Revengingly ensuebles me. Shakspeare.

REVENUE. n. s. [from revenue, French. Its accent is uncertain.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.

They privily send over unto them the revenues
wherewith they are there maintained. Spenser.
She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
And in her heart scorns our poverty. Shakspeare.

Only I retain

The name and all the addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, beloved sons, be yours. Shaksf.
Many offices are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life. Temple.

If the woman could have been contented with golden eggs, she might have kept that revenue on still. L'Estrange.

His vassals easy, and the owner blest,
They pay a trifle, and enjoy the rest;
Not so a nation's revenues are paid;

The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.
When men grew great from their revenue spent,
And fly from bailiffs into parliament. Young.

TO REVERBERATE. v. a. [from reverbero, Latin.] To resound; to reverberate. Not in use.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness:
The youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose loud sound
Reverbs no hollowness. Shakspeare.

REVERBERANT. adj. [from reverberans, Lat.]

Resounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage should be, I think, reverberant.

Hollow your name to the reverberate hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out, Olivia! Shakspeare.

TO REVERBERATE. v. a. [from reverbero,
Lat. reverberer, Fr.]

1. To beat back.

Nor doth he know them for aught,
Till he behold them formed in th' applause
Where they're extended; which, like an arch, reverberates

The sound again. Shakspeare.
As the sight of the eye is like a glass, so is the ear a sinuous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and rever- berate the sound. Bacon.

As we, to improve the nobler kinds of fruits, are at the expence of walls to receive and reverberate
the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good soil, equal the production of warmer countries. Swift.

2. To heat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.

Crocus martis, that is steel corroded with vinegar or sulphur, and after reverberated with fire, the load-stone will not attract. Brown.

TO REVERBERATE. v. n.

1. To be driven back; to bound back.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villerio, that they dispelled all clouds. Howel.

2. To resound.

Start
And echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And ev'n at hand a drum is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate all as well as thine. Shaksf.

REVERBERATION. n. s. [from reverberation,
Fr. from reverberate.] The act of beating or driving back.

To the reflection of visibles, small glasses suffice;
but to the reverberation of audibles, are required greater spaces. Bacon.

The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several reverberations of the same image from two opposite looking-glasses. Addison.

REVERBERATORY. adj. [from reverberatoire,
Fr.] Returning; beating back.

Good lime may be made of all kinds of flints,
but they are hard to burn, except in a reverberatory kiln. Moxon.

TO REVERERE. v. a. [from reverer, Fr. reverer, Latin.] To reverence; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.

An emperor often stamped on his coins the face or ornaments of his colleague, and we may suppose Lucius Verus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather revered as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Addison.

Jove shall again revere your pow'r,
And rise a swan, or fall a show'r. Prior.

Taught 'em how clemency made pow'r rever'd,
And that the prince belov'd was truly fear'd. Prior.

REVERENCE. n. s. [from reverence, Fr. rever- entia, Lat.]

1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.

When quarrels and factions are carried openly, it is a sign the reverence of government is lost. Bacon.
Higher of the genial bed,

And with mysterious reverence I deem. Milton.

In your prayers, use reverent postures and the lowest gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God in our reverence, to whom we cannot exceed. Taylor.

A poet cannot have too great a reverence for readers. Dryden.

The fear, acceptable to God, is a filial fear; an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which produces in us an inclination to his service, and an unwillingness to offend him. Rogers.

2. Act of obeisance; bow; courtesy.

Now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence. Shakspeare.

He led her eas'ly forth,
Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
She rev'rence did, then blush'd as one dismay'd. Fairfax.

Had not men the hoary heads rever'd,
Or boys paid rev'rence when a man appear'd,
Both must have dy'd. Dryden.

Up starts the beldam,
And reverence made, accosted thus the queen. Dryden.

The monarch
Commands into the court the beauteous Emily:
So call'd, she came; the senate rose and paid
Becoming rev'rence to the royal maid. Dryden.

3. Title of the clergy.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to. Shaksf.

4. Poetical title of a father.

O my dear father! let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shakspeare.

TO REVERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.

Those that I rev'rence, those I fear, the wife;
At fools I laugh, not fear them. Shakspeare.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milt.

He slew Aetion, but despoil'd him not;
Nor in his hate the funeral rites forgot;
Arm'd as he was, he sent him whole below,
And reverenc'd thus the manes of his foe. Dryden.

As his goodness will forbid us to dread him as slaves, so his majesty will command us to reverence him as sons. Rogers.

He presents every one so often before God in his prayers, that he never thinks he can esteem, re- verence, or serve those enough, for whom he implores so many mercies from God. Law.

REVERENCER. n. s. [from reverence.]

One who regards with reverence.

The Athenians, quite sunk in their affairs, had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great reverencers of crowned heads. Swift.

REVEREND. adj. [from reverend, Fr. reverendus,
Latin].

1. Venerable; deserving reverence; exacting respect by his appearance.

Let his lack of years be no impediment, to let him lack a reverend estimation. Shakspeare.
Reverend and gracious senators. Shakspeare.

Onias, who had been high priest, reverend in conversation, and gentle in condition, prayed for the Jews. 2 Maccabees.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend and religious man,
His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Milton.

A reverend fire among them came,
Who preach'd conversion and repentance. Milton.

Reverend old man! lo here confess he stands.

Pope.

2. The honorary epithet of the clergy. We style a clergyman, reverend; a bishop, right reverend; an archbishop, most reverend.

REVERENT. adj. [reverens, Latin.] Humble; expressing submission; testifying veneration.

They forthwith to the place Repairing where he judg'd them, prostrate fell Before him reverent.

Milton.

Meet then the senior, far renown for sense, With revert awe, but decent confidence.

Pope.

REVERENTIAL. adj. [reverentielle, Fr. from reverent.] Expressing reverence; proceeding from awe and veneration.

That oaths made in reverential fear

Of love and his wrath may any forswear.

Donne.

The least degree of contempt weakens religion; it properly consisting in a reverential esteem of things sacred.

South.

The reason of the institution being forgot, the after-ages perverted it, supposing only a reverential gratitude paid to the earth as the common parent.

Woodward.

All look up, with reverential awe,

At crimes that 'scape, or triumph o'er the law.

Pope.

REVERENTIALLY. adv. [from reverential.] With show of reverence.

The Jews, reverentially declining the situation of their temple, place their beds from north to south.

Brown.

REVERENTLY. adv. [from reverent.] Respectfully; with awe; with reverence.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently.

Shakspeare.

His disciples here,

By their great master sent to preach him every where,

Most reverently receiv'd.

Drayton.

To nearest ports their shatter'd ships repair,

Whereby our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd;

So reverently men quit th' open air,

When thunder speaks the angry gods abroad.

Dryden.

Then down with all thy boasted volumes, down;

Only reserve the sacred one:

Low, reverently low,

Make thy stubborn knowledge bow:

To look to heav'n be blind to all below.

Prior.

REVERER. n. s. [from revere.] One who venerates; one who reveres.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that it was the business of the Masorites, to number not only the sections and lines, but even the words and letters of the Old Testament.

Government of the Tongue.

REVERSAL. n. s. [from reverse.] Change of sentence.

The king, in the reversal of the attainders of his partakers, had his will.

Bacon.

A pyramid reversed may stand upon his point, if balanced by admirable skill.

Temple.

2. To overturn; to subvert.

These now controul a wretched people's fate, These can divide, and these reverse the state.

Pope.

3. To turn back.

Michael's sword stay'd not; But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd Satan's right side.

Milton.

4. To contradict; to repeal.

Better it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometime an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse it, than that strifes should have respite to grow, and not come speedily unto some end.

Hooker.

A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed.

VOL. II.

Hayward.

Death, his doom which I

To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse, To better life shall yield him.

Milton.

Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast.

South.

Those seem to do best, who, taking useful hints from facts, carry them in their minds to be judged of, by what they shall find in history to confirm or reverse these imperfect observations.

Locke.

5. To turn to the contrary.

These plain characters we rarely find, Though strong the bent, yet quick the turns of mind;

Or puzzling contraries confound the whole,

Or affectations quite reverse the soul.

Pope.

6. To put each in the place of the other.

With what tyranny custom governs men! it makes that reputable in one age, which was a vice in another, and reverses even the distinctions of good and evil.

Rogers.

7. To recall; to renew. Obsolete.

Well knowing true all he did rehearse,

And to his fresh remembrance did reverse

The ugly view of his deformed crimes.

Spenser.

TO REVERSE. v. n. [revertere, reversus, Latin.] To return.

REVERSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Change; vicissitude.

The strange reverse of fate you see;

I pity'd you, now you may pity me.

Dryden.

By a strange reverse of things, Justinian's law, which for many ages was neglected, does now obtain, and the Theodosian code is in a manner antiquated.

Baker.

2. A contrary; an opposite. This is a sense rather colloquial than analogous.

Count Tariff appeared the reverse of Goodman

Fact.

Addison.

The performances, to which God has annexed the promises of eternity, are just the reverse of all the pursuits of sense.

Rogers.

3. [revers, Fr.] The side of the coin on which the head is not impressed.

As the Romans set down the image and inscription of the consul, afterward of the emperor on the one side, so they changed the reverse always upon new events.

Camden.

Our guard upon the royal side;

On the reverse our beauty's pride.

Waller.

Several reverses are owned to be the representations of antique figures.

Addison.

REVERSIBLE. adj. [reversible, Fr. from reverse.] Capable of being reversed.

And he our subjects next degree in hope.

Shakspeare.

A life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entered on.

Hammond.

2. Succession; right of succession.

He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends; many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recompense of services, procured the reversion of his office.

Clarendon.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute?

South.

So many candidates there stand for wit,

A place at court is scarce so hard to get;

In vain they crowd each other at the door;

For e'en reversions are all begg'd before.

Dryden.

Fame's a reversion in which men take place,

O late reversion! at their own decease.

Young.

REVERSIONARY. adj. [from reversion.]

and a general review of nature; that, by comparing them, their full correspondence may appear. Burnet.

The works of nature will bear a thousand views and reviews; the more narrowly we look into them,
the more occasion we shall have to admire. Atterbury.

To REVILE. v. a. [re and vile.] To reproach; to vilify; to treat with contumely.

Asked for their paps by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or saib. Spenser.
I read in's looks

Matter against me; and his eye revil'd
Me as his abject object. Shakspeare.

Fear not the reproach of men, neither be afraid of their revilings. Isaiab.

She still beareth him an invincible hatred, revil- eth him to his face, and railleth at him in all companies. Swift.

REVILE. n. f. [from the verb.] Reproach; contumely; exprobration. Not used, but elegant.

such a grievance. Ayliffe.

To REVO'KE. v. a. [revoker, Fr. revoco, Lat.]

1. To repeal; to reverse.

When we abrogate a law as being ill made, the whole cause for which it was made still remaining, do we not herein revoke our very own deed, and upbraid ourselves with folly, yea all that were makers of it with oversight and error? Hooker.

What reason is there, but that those grants and privileges should be revoked, or reduced to the first intention? Spenser.

Without my Aurenzebe I cannot live;
Revoke his doom, or else my sentence give. Dryden.

2. To check; to repress.

She strove their sudden rages to revoke,
That at the last repressing fury mad,
They 'gan abstain. Spenser.

3. To draw back.

Shame were to revoke
The forward footing for an hidden shade. Spenser.

Seas are troubled, when they do revoke
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

REVO'KEMENT. n. f. [from revoke.] Revocation; repeal; recall. Little in use.

Let it be nois'd,
That through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes. Shakspeare.

To REVOL'T. v. n. [revolter, Fr. revol- tare, Italian.]

1. To fall off from one to another. It denotes something of pravity or rebellion.

All will revolt from me, and turn to him.
Shakspeare.

Our discontented counties do revolt,
Our people quarrel with obedience. Shakspeare.

This people hath a revolving and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone. Jeremiah.

2. To change. Not in use.

You are already love's firm votary,
And cannot soon revolt and change your mind. Shakspeare.

REVOL'T. n. f. [revolte, French; from the verb.]

1. Desertion; change of sides.

He was greatly strengthened, and the enemy as much enfeebled by daily revolts. Raleigh.

If all our levies are made in Scotland or Ireland, may not those two parts of the monarchy be too powerful for the rest, in case of a revolt? Addison.

2. A revolter; one who changes sides.
Not in use.

You ingrate revolts,
You bloody Neros, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England. Shakspeare.

3. Gross departure from duty.

Your daughter hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes
To an extravagant and wheeling stranger. Shakspeare.

REVOL'TED. part. [from revolt.] Having swerved from duty.

Thou single hast maintain'd
Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

REVOL'TER. n. f. [from revolt.] One who changes sides; a deserter; a renegade.

Fair honour that thou dost thy God, in trusting
He will accept thee to defend his cause,
A murderer, a revolter, and a robber. Milton.

He was not a revolter from the truth, which he had once embraced. Atterbury.

Those, who are negligent or revolters, shall perish. Swift.

TO REVOLVE. v. n. [revolvere, Latin.]

1. To roll in a circle; to perform a revolution.

They do not revolve about any common centre.

Cheyne.

If the earth revolve thus, each house near the equator must move a thousand miles an hour. Watts.

Each revolving year,

The teeming ewes a triple offspring bear. Pope.

2. To fall back.

On the desertion of an appeal, the jurisdiction does ipso jure revolve to the judge a quo. Ayliffe.

TO REVOLVE. v. a.

1. To roll any thing round.

Then in the East her turn she shines,
Revolve'd on heav'n's great axis. Milton.

2. To consider; to meditate on.

You may revolve what tales I told you
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks of war. Shaksp.

REVOLUTION. n. f. [revolution, French;
revolutus, Latin.]

1. Course of any thing which returns to the point at which it began to move.

On their orbs impose

Such restless revolution, day by day

Repeated.

Milton.

They will be taught the diurnal revolution of the heavens. Watts.

2. Space measured by some revolution.

At certain revolutions are they brought,
And feel by turns the bitter change. Milton.

Meteors have no more time allowed them for their mounting, than the short revolution of a day.

Dryden.

The Persian wept over his army, that within the revolution of a single age, not a man would be left alive. Wake.

3. Change in the state of a government or country. It is used among us καὶ ἐξ ἑσχέρων, for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.

The late revolution, justified by its necessity, and the good it had produced, will be a lasting answer.

Davenant.

4. Rotation; circular motion.

5. Motion backward.

Fear

Comes thund'ring back with dreadful revolution
On my defenceless head. Milton.

TO REVOMIT. v. a. [revomir, French;
re and vomit.] To vomit; to vomit
again.

They might cast it up, and take more, vomiting and revomiting what they drink. Hakewill.

REVULSION. n. f. [revulsion, Fr. revulsus, Lat.] The act of revelling or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it deri- vation. Wifeman.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion it may make of humours from the head. Temple.

REVULSIVE. adj. Having the power of revulsion.

His flux of blood breaking forth again with greater violence than it had done before, was not to be stopped by outward applications, nor the revulsives
of any kind. Fell.

TO REWARD. v. a. [re and award, to give in return. Skinner.]

1. To give in return.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Samuel.

They rewarded me evil for good. Psalms.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

God rewards those that have made use of the single talent, that lowest proportion of grace, which he is pleased to give; and the method of his reward- ing is by giving them more grace. Hammond.

To judge th' unfaithful dead, but to reward

His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

There is no more reason to reward a man for believing that four is more than three, than for being hungry or sleepy; because these things do not proceed from choice, but from natural necessity. A man must do so, nor can he do otherwise. Wilkins.

The Supreme Being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Broome.

REWARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good performed.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill; without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit, and not a reward.

Hooker.

To myself I owe this due regard,

Not to make love my gift, but my reward. Dryden.

Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors. Taylor.

REWARDER. n. f. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakspere.

As the Supreme Being is the only proper judge of our perfections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them. Addison.

Ill judges, as well as rewarders, have popular assemblies been, of those who best deserved from them. Swift.

TO REWORD. v. a. [re and word.] To repeat in the same words.

Bring me to the test,

And I the matter will reword; which madness
Would gambol from. Shakspere.

RHABARBARATE. adj. [from rhaharbara, Latin.] Impregnated or tintured with rhubarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the fennate, rhaharbarate, and sweet manna purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters. Floyer.

RHABDOMANCY. n. f. [ῥαβδος and μαν- τεία.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhahdomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries, with a forked hazel, commonly called Moses's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it. Brown.

RHAPSODIST. n. f. [from rhapsody.] One who writes without regular dependance of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim? Watts.

RHAPSODY. n. f. [ῥαψωδία; ῥάπτω, to sew, and ὀδή, a song.] Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependance or natural connection.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes

A rhapsody of words. Shakspere.

This confusion and rhapsody of difficulties was not to be supposed in each single sinner. Hammond.

He, that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others. Locke.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watts.

RHEIN-BERRY. n. f. [spina cervina, Lat.]

Buckthorn, a plant.

RHETORICK. n. f. [ῥητορικὴ; rhétorique,
French.]

1. The act of speaking not merely with propriety, but with art and elegance.

We could not allow him an orator, who had the best thoughts, and who knew all the rules of rheto- rique, if he had not acquired the art of using them.

Dryden.

Of the passions, and how they are moved, Aristotle, in his second book of rhétorique, hath admirably discoursed in a little compass. Locke.

Grammar teacheth us to speak properly, rhétorique
instructs to speak elegantly. Baker.

2. The power of persuasion; oratory.

The heart's still rhétorique, disclos'd with eyes.

Shakspere.

His sober lips then did he softly part,
Whence of pure rhétorique whole streams outflow.

Fairfax.

Enjoy your dear wit and gay rhétorique,
That hath so well been taught her dazling fence.

Milton.

RHETORICAL. adj. [rhétoricus, Latin;
from rhétorique.] Pertaining to rhetoric;
oratorical; figurative.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that rhétorical flourishes cannot at all loosen it. More.

Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a dark garment at Pharsalia, these were prefaces of their overthrow, which, notwithstanding are scarce rhétorical sequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again. Brown.

The subject may be moral, logical, or rhétorical, which does not come under our senses. Watts.

RHETORICALLY. adv. [from rhétorical.]

Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.

TO RHETORICATE. v. n. [rhétoriceo, low Latin; from rhétorique.] To play the orator; to attack the passions.

'Twill be much more seasonable to reform, than apologize or rhétorate; not to suffer themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved.

Decay of Piety.

RHETORICIAN. n. f. [rhétoricien, French;
rhétor, Latin.]

1. One who teaches the science of rhetor-ick.

The ancient sophists and rhétoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old. Bacon.

'Tis the business of rhétoricians to treat the characters of the passions. Dryden.

A man may be a very good rhétorician, and yet at the same time a mean orator. Baker.

2. An orator. Less proper.

He play'd at Eions a declaiming prize,
At which the vanquish'd rhétorician dies. Dryden.

RHETORICIAN. adj. Suited a master of rhetorick.

Boldly presum'd with rhétorician pride,
To hold of any question either side. Blackmore.

RHEUM. n. f. [ῥέυμα; rhéume, French.]

A thin watery matter oozing through the glands, chiefly about the mouth. Quincy.

Trust not these cunning waters of his eyes;

For villainy is not without such a rheum;

And he, long traded in it, makes it seem

Like rivers of remorse. Shakspere.

You did void your rheum upon my beard. Shaksp.

Each changing season does its poison bring,

Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring.

Prior.

R H Y

RHEU'MATICK. adj. [ῥευματικὸς; from rheum.] Proceeding from rheum or a peccant watery humour.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound. Shakspeare.
The blood taken away looked very fizy or rheumatick. Floyer.

RHEU'MATISM. n. s. [ῥευματισμός; rheumatisme, French; rheumatismus, Latin.] A painful distemper supposed to proceed from acrid humours.

Rheumatism is a distemper affecting chiefly the membrana communis musculorum, which it makes rigid and unfit for motion; and it seems to be occasioned almost by the same causes, as the mucilaginous glands in the joints are rendered stiff and gritty in the gout. Quincy.

The throting quinsy, 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I send to rack the joints. Dryden.

RHEU'MY. adj. [from rheum.] Full of sharp moisture.

Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air,
To add unto his sickness? Shakspeare.

The south he loos'd, who night and horror brings,
And fogs are shaken from his flaggy wings:
From his divided beard two streams he pours;
His head and rheumy eyes distil in show'rs. Dryden.

RHINO'CEROS. n. s. [ῥῖν and κέρας; rhinoceros, French.] A vast beast in the East Indies armed with a horn on his nose.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tyger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakspeare.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, shew a landscape of the country natural to the beast; as to the rhinoceros an East Indian landscape, the crocodile, an Egyptian. Peacbam.

RHOMB. n. s. [rhombe, French; rhombus, Latin; ῥομβός.] In geometry, a parallelogram or quadrangular figure, having its four sides equal, and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse: it is formed by two equal and right cones joined together at their base. Trevoux and Harris.

Save the sun his labour, and that swift Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd
Invisible else above all stars, the wheel
Of day and night. Milton.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half moons and wings. Milton.

RHO'MBICK. adj. [from rhomb.] Shaped like a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; the asteria in form of a star, and they are of a rhombick figure. Grew.

RHO'MBOID. n. s. [ῥομβοειδής; rhomboïde, French.] A figure approaching to a rhomb.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; and they are of a rhomboid figure; talk, of such as are rhomboid. Grew.

RHOMBOIDAL. adj. [from rhomboid.] Approaching in shape to a rhomb.

Another rhomboidal selenites of a compressed form, had many others infixed round the middle of it. Woodward.

RHU'BARB. n. s. [ῥαβάρβα, Latin.] A medicinal root slightly purgative, referred by botanists to the dock.

What rhubarb, fenna, or what purgative drug
Would scour these English hence? Shakspeare.
Having fixed the fontanel, I purged him with an infusion of rhubarb in small ale. Wifeman.

RHYME. n. s. [ῥυμός; rhythme, Fr.]

R I B

1. A harmonical succession of sounds.

The youth with songs and rhymes:
Some dance, some hale the rope. Denham.

2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last sound of one verse to the last sound or syllable of another.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which like ships they steer their courses. Hudibras.

Such was the news, indeed, but songs and rhymes
Prevail as much in these hard iron times;
As would a plump of trembling fowl, that rise
Against an eagle fousing from the skies. Dryden.

If Cupid throws a single dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart;
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis sure he must transfix the liver;
For rhyme with reason may dispense,
And sound has right to govern sense. Prior.

3. Poetry; a poem.

All his manly power it did disperse,
As he were warmed with enchanted rhymes,
That oftentimes he quak'd. Fairy Queen.

Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.

Now sportive youth,
Carol incondite rhythms with suiting notes,
And quaver inharmonious. Philips.

4. A word of sound to answer to another word.

What wise means to gain it hast thou chose?
Know, fame and fortune both are made of prose.
Is thy ambition sweating for a rhyme,
Thou unambitious fool, at this late time? Young.

RHYME or reason. Number or sense.

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme;
But from that time unto this season,
I had neither rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakspeare.

TO RHYME. v. n.

1. To agree in sound.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagotted his notions as they fell,
And, if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dry.

2. To make verses.

These fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies favours, they do always reason themselves out again. Shakspeare.

There march'd the bard and blockhead, side by side,
Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride. Pope.

RHY'MER. } n. s. [from rhyme.] One RHY'MSTER. } who makes rhymes; a versifier; a poet in contempt.

Scall'd rhymers will ballad us out o' tune. Shakf.
It was made penal to the English, to permit the Irish to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhymers, or news-tellers. Davies.

Rhymer come on, and do the worst you can;
I fear not you, nor yet a better man. Dryden.

Milton's rhyme is constrained at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhymist, though not a poet. Dryden.

I speak of those who are only rhymsters. Dennis.

RHY'THMICAL. adj. [ῥυθμικός; rhythmique, French; from rhyme or rhythm.] Harmonical; having one sound proportioned to another.

RIB. n. s. [nibbe, Saxon.]

1. A bone in the body.

Of these there are twenty-four in number, viz.
twelve on each side the twelve vertebrae of the back;
they are segments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebrae, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebrae: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebrae: the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery: their extremities which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle respects the head: the cartilages are harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two sorts; the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum: the five lower are called false ribs, because they are softer and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum, the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and intrails: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest: it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the musculus obliquus descendens. Quincy.

R I B

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature! Shakspeare.

He open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm
And life blood streaming fresh. Milton.

Sure he, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide,
And ribs of iron arm'd his side. Dryden.

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.

I should not see the sandy hour glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial. Shakspeare.

The ships with shatter'd ribs scarce creeping from the seas. Drayton.

3. Any prominence running in lines: as the stalks of a leaf.

RI'BALD. n. s. [ribauld, French; ribaldo, Italian.] A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.

That lewd ribbald, with vile lust advanced,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse so fair and sheen. Spenser.

Your ribauld nag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies. Shakspeare.

The busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer. Shakspeare.

Ne'er one sprig of laurels grac'd these ribbalds,
From flashing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds. Pope.

RI'BALDRY. n. s. [from ribald; ribaudie, old French.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.

Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than barefaced ribaldry. Dryden.

The ribaldry of the low characters is different;
the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other. Dryden.

In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought,

Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
Ere yet debauch'd by modern gallantry

To trifling jests and salsome ribaldry. Granville.

If the outward profession of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophaneness. Swift.

RI'BAND. n. s. [rubande, ruben, French.]

This word is sometimes written ribon.
A fillet of silk; a narrow web of silk,
which is worn for ornament.

Quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendent, flaring 'bout her head. Shakspeare.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose. Dryden.

See! in the lists they wait the trumpet's sound;
Some love device is wrought on ev'ry sword,
And ev'ry riband bears some myrtick word. Granv.

R I C

RIBBED. adj. [from rib.]

1. Furnished with ribs.

Was I by rocks engender'd; rib'd with steel?
Such tortures to resist, or not to feel? Sandys.
Hung on each bough a single leaf appears,
Which shrivell'd in its infancy remains,
Like a clos'd fan, nor stretches wide its veins,
But as the seasons in their circle run,
Opens its ribb'd surface to the nearer sun. Gay.

2. Enclosed as the body by ribs.

Remember

That nat'ral brav'ry of your isle, which stands
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unscaleable, and roaring waters. Shaks.

3. Marked with protuberant lines.

RIBBON. n. f. See RIBAND.

TO RIBROAST. v. n. [rib and roast.] To beat soundly. A burlesque word.

That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And gives thanks for the princely blows;
Departs not meanly proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent ribroasting. Butler.

I have been pinched in flesh, and well ribroasted
under my former masters; but I'm in now for skin and all. L'Estrange.

RIBWORT. n. f. [plantago.] A plant.

RIC, denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man: as in these verses of Fortunatus:

*Hilperice potens, si interpres barbarus
adfit,*

Adjutor fortis hoc quoque nomen habet.

Hilp'ric barbarians a stout helper term.

So Alfrie is altogether strong; Ethelric, nobly strong or powerful: to the same sense as Polycrates, Crato, Plutarchus, Opimius. Gibson's Camden.

RICE. n. f. [oryza, Lat.] One of the esculent grains: it hath its grains disposed into a panicle, which are almost of an oval figure, and are covered with a thick husk, somewhat like barley: this grain is cultivated in most of the eastern countries. Miller.

Rice is the food of two thirds of mankind: it is kindly to human constitutions, proper for the consumptive, and those subject to hæmorrhages. Arbutnot.

If the snuff get out of the snuffers, it may fall into a dish of rice milk. Swift.

RICH. adj. [riche, Fr. ricco, Ital. rica,
Saxon.]

1. Wealthy; abounding in wealth; abounding in money or possessions; opulent:
opposed to poor.

I am as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl. Shaks.
The rich shall not give more, and the poor no less. Exodus.

A thief bent to unhoard the cash
Of some rich burgher. Milton.

Rich was his soul, though his attire was poor,
As heav'n had cloath'd his own ambassador. Dryden.
Several nations of the Americans are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life. Locke.
He may look upon the rich as benefactors, who have beautified the prospect all around him. Seed.

2. Valuable; estimable; precious; splendid; sumptuous.

Earth, in her rich attire,
Consummate lovely smil'd. Milton.
Matilda never was meanly dress'd in her life; and nothing pleases her in dress, but that which is very rich and beautiful to the eye. Law.

3. Having any ingredients or qualities in a great quantity or degree.

So we th' Arabian coast do know
At distance, when the spices blow,
By the rich odour taught to steer,
Though neither day nor star appear. Waller.
If life be short, it shall be glorious,
Each minute shall be rich in some great action. Rowe.

R I C

Sauces and rich spices are fetched from India.

Baker.

4. Fertile; fruitful.

There are, who fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

5. Abundant; plentiful.

The gorgeous Fast with richest hand

We make thee lady. Shakspeare.

RICHES. n. f. [richesses, French.]

1. Wealth; money or possessions.

The instrumentalness of riches to charity has rendered it necessary by law to secure propriety. Hammond.

Chemists seek riches by transmutation and the great elixir. Spratt.

Riches do not consist in having more gold and silver, but in having more in proportion than our neighbours, whereby we are enabled to procure to ourselves a greater plenty of the conveniences of life, than comes within their reach, who, sharing the gold and silver of the world in a less proportion, want the means of plenty and power, and so are poorer. Locke.

What riches give us, let us first enquire,
Meat, fire, and cloaths; what more? meat, cloaths, and fire. Pope.

2. Splendid sumptuous appearance.

The riches of heav'n's pavement, trodden gold.
Milton.

RICHLY. adv. [from rich.]

Shou'd clearly prove the richness of his food. Dryden.

RICK. n. f. See REEK.

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.

An inundation
O'erflowed a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born. Swift.
Mice and rats do great injuries in the field, houses, barns, and corn ricks. Mortimer.

R I D

2. A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.

In the north they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them in the field. Mortimer.

RICKETS. n. f. [rachitis, Latin. A name given to the distemper at its first appearance by Glisson.] A distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction. Quincy.

In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and ricketts are put altogether, by reason of their likeness. Graunt.

O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,
I should possess th' estate, if he were dead;
He's so far gone with the ricketts and th' evil,
That one small dose will send him to the devil. Dryden.

So when at school we first declaim,
Old Busby walks us in a theme,
Whose props support our infant vein,
And help the ricketts in the brain;
But when our souls their force dilate,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate. Prior.

RICKETY. adj. [from ricketts.] Diseased with the rickets.

In a young animal, when the solids are too lax,
the case of ricketty children, the diet should be gently astringent. Arbutnot.

and rid you out of their bondage. Exodus.

2. To clear; to disencumber.

They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned pastor, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment. Hooker.

I must rid all the seas of pirates. Shakspeare.
We'll use his countenance; which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking off. Shakspeare.

Upon the word, stept forth
Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care. Ben Jonson.

I can put on Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,
Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd. Milton.

Did saints for this bring in their plate;
For when they thought the cause had need on't,
Happy was he that could be rid on't. Hudibras.

The god uneasy till he slept again,
Resolv'd at once to rid himself of pain. Dryden.

The greater visible good does not always raise men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have; though every little trouble moves us, and sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.

The ladies asked, whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaden themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them? Addison.

RIDDLE. n. f. [rædely, Saxon; from ræde, counsel, perhaps a trial of wit.]

1. An enigma; a puzzling question; a dark problem.

How did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and in charms of death? Shakspeare.
The Theban monster, that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spright
Cast herself headlong from the Ismenian sleep. Milton.

2. Any thing puzzling.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;
Not love, if any lov'd her: hey day!
So cowards never use their might,
But against such as will not fight. Hudibras.

3. [hpiddle, Saxon.] A coarse or open sieve.

Horfe-beans and tares, sown together, are easily parted with a riddle. Mortimer.

To RIDDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]1. To solve; to unriddle. There is something of whimsical analogy between the two senses of the word riddle; as, we say, to sift a question: but their derivations differ.

Riddle me this, and guess him if you can,
Who bears a nation in a single man? Dryden.

2. To separate by a coarse sieve.

The finest sifted mould must be riddled in. Mortimer.

To RIDDLE. v. n. To speak ambiguously or obscurely.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling thrift. Shakspeare.

RIDDLINGLY. adv. [from riddle.] In the manner of a riddle; secretly.

Though like the pestilence and old-fashion'd love, Riddlingly it catch men, and dorth remove Never, till it be starv'd out, yet their state Is poor. Donne.

Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgment from above. Milton.
2. Justice; not injury.
Persons of noble blood are less envied in their rising; for it seemeth but right done to their birth. Bacon.
In the midst of your invectives, do the Turks this right, as to remember that they are no idolaters. Bacon.
Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
And well deserv'd, had fortune done him right. Dryden.
He, that would do right to religion, cannot take a more effectual course, than by reconciling it with the happiness of mankind. Tillotson.
3. Freedom from guilt; goodness.
His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might Be wrong, his life I'm sure was in the right. Cowley.
4. Freedom from error.
Seldom your opinions err;
Your eyes are always in the right. Prior.
5. Just claim.
The Roman citizens were, by the sword, taught to acknowledge the pope their lord, though they knew not by what right. Raleigh.
The proud tyrant would many times say, that whatsoever belonged unto the empire of Rome, was of right his, for as much as he was possessed of the imperial scepter, which his great grandfather mahomet had by law of arms won from Constantine. Knolles.
Subdue by force, all who refuse
Right reason for their law; and for their king Messiah, who by right of merit reigns. Milton.
My right to it appears,
By long possession of eight hundred years. Dryden.
Might and right are inseparable in the opinion of the world. L'Estrange.
Descriptions, figures, and fables must be in all heroick poems; every poet hath as much right to them, as every man hath to air. Dryden.
Judah pronounced sentence of death against Thamar: our author thinks it is very good proof, that because he did it, therefore he had a right to do it. Locke.

- Agrippa is generally ranged in sets of medals among the emperors; as some among the empreses have no other right. Addison.
6. That which justly belongs to one.
To thee doth the right of her appertain, seeing thou only art of her kindred. Tobit.
The custom of employing these great persons in all great offices, passes for a right. Temple.
The pris'ner freed himself by nature's laws,
Born free, he sought his right. Dryden.
7. Property; interest.
A subject in his prince may claim a right,
Nor suffer him with strength impair'd to fight. Dryden.
8. Power; prerogative.
God hath a sovereign right over us, as we are his creatures, and by virtue of this right, he might, without injustice, have imposed difficult tasks: but in making laws, he hath not made use of this right. Tillotson.
9. Immunity; privilege.
The citizens,
Let them but have their rights, are ever forward
In celebration of this day with shews. Shakspeare.
Their only thoughts and hope was to defend their own rights and liberties, due to them by the law. Clarendon.
10. The side not left.
On his right
The radiant image of his glory sat,
His only Son. Milton.
11. To RIGHTS. In a direct line; straight.
These strata failing, to whole tract sinks down to rights into the abyss, and is swallowed up by it. Woodward.
12. To RIGHTS. With deliverance from error.
Several have gone about to inform them, and set them to rights; but for want of that knowledge of the present system of nature, have not given the satisfaction expected. Woodward.
- To RIGHT. v. a. To do justice to; to establish in possessions justly claimed; to relieve from wrong.
How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me? gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly. Shakspeare.
If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and bound to restitution. Taylor.
I cou'd not expedient see,
On this side death, to right our family. Waller.
Some seeking unto courts, and judicial endeavours to right ourselves, are still innocent. Kettlewell.
Make my father known,
To right my honour, and redeem your own. Dryden.
- RIGHT-HAND. n. f. Not the left.
The rank of officers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right-hand brings you to the place. Shakspeare.
- RIGHTTEOUS. adj. [nithpīre, Saxon; whence rightwise in old authors, and rightwisely in bishop Fisher: so much are words corrupted by pronunciation.]
1. Just; honest; virtuous; uncorrupt.
That far be from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked. Genesis.
2. Equitable; agreeing with right.
Kill my rival too; for he no less Deserves; and I thy righteous doom will blefs. Dryden.
- RIGHTTEOUSLY. adv. [from righteous.]
Honestly; virtuously.
Athens did righteously decide,
When Phocion and when Socrates were try'd;
As righteously they did those dooms repent,
Still they were wise, whatever way they went. Dryden.
- RIGHTTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from righteous.]
Justice; honesty; virtue; goodness;
integrity.

- The scripture, ascribing to the persons of men righteousness, in regard of their manifold virtues, may not be construed, as though it did thereby clear them from all faults. Hooker.
Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Cou'd warning make the world more just or wise;
Learn righteousness, and dread th'avenging deities. Dryden.
Good men often suffer, and that even for the sake of righteousness. Nelson.
- RIGHTFUL. adj. [right and full.]
1. Having the right; having the just claim.
As in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to supplant the rightful heir;
I lost my liberty, and they their lives. Shakspeare.
Some will mourn in ashes, some coal black,
For the deposing of a rightful king. Shakspeare.
2. Honest; just; agreeable to justice.
Nor would, for gold or fee,
Be won, their rightful causes down to tread. Spenser.
Gather all the smiling hours;
Such as with friendly care have guarded Patriots and kings in rightful wars. Prior.
- RIGHTFULLY. adv. [from rightful.] According to right; according to justice.
Henry, who claimed by succession, was sensible that his title was not sound; but was rightfully in Mortimer, who had married the heir of York. Dryden.
- RIGHTFULNESS. n. f. [from rightful.] Moral rectitude.
But still, although we fail of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these superfluities,
Nor wholly wink though void of purest rightfulness. Sidney.
- RIGHTLY. adv. [from right.]
1. According to truth or justice; properly; suitably; not erroneously.
Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd Pow'rs of fire, air, water, and earth beneath. Milton.
Descend from heav'n, Urania! by that name
If rightly thou art call'd. Milton.
For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and plagues of men. Milton.
A man can never have so certain a knowledge, that a proposition, which contradicts the clear principles of his own knowledge, was divinely revealed, or that he understands the words rightly, wherein it is delivered; as he has, that the contrary is true. Locke.
Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from their deeds I rightlier may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.
2. Honestly; uprightly.
Let not my jealousies be your dishonour;
You may be rightly just, whatever I shall think. Shakspeare.
3. Exactly.
Should I grant, thou didst not rightly see;
Then thou wert first deceiv'd. Dryden.
4. Straightly; directly.
We wish one end; but differ in order and way,
that leadeth rightly to that end. Ascham.
- RIGHTNESS. n. f. [from right.]
1. Conformity to truth; exemption from being wrong; rectitude; not error.
It is not necessary for a man to be assured of the rightness of his conscience, by such an infallible certainty of persuasion as amounts to the clearness of a demonstration; but it is sufficient if he knows it upon grounds of such a probability, as shall exclude all rational grounds of doubting. South.
Like brute beasts we travel with the herd, and are never so solicitous for the rightness of the way, as for the number or figure of our company. Rogers.
2. Straightness.
Sounds move strongest in a right line, which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance. Bacon.

R I G

RIGID. adj. [rigide, Fr. rigidus, Lat.]

1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.

A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid one of the same substance and weight. Ray.

2. Severe; inflexible.

His severe judgment giving law,
His modest fancy kept in awe;
As rigid husbands jealous are,
When they believe their wives too fair. Denham.

3. Unremitted; unmitigated.

Queen of this universe! do not believe
Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die. Milt.

4. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Philips.

Cressy plains
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwitthood Could do in rigid fight. Philips.

RIGIDITY. n. f. [rigidité, Fr. from rigid.]

1. Stiffness.

Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when, being stiff or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance, in order to the preservation of health; it is to be remedied by fomentations.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions: rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres. Arbutnot.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.

This severe observation of nature, by the one in her commonest, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness. Wotton.

RIGIDLY. adv. [from rigid.]

1. Stiffly; unpliantly.

2. Severely; inflexibly; without remission; without mitigation.

RIGIDNESS. n. f. [from rigid.] Stiffness; severity; inflexibility.

RIGLET. n. f. [regulet, French.] A flat thin square piece of wood.

The pieces that are intended to make the frames for pictures, before they are molded, are called riglets. Moxon.

RIGOL. n. f. A circle. Used in Shakspeare for a diadem.

This sleep is sound; this is a sleep
That, from this golden rigol, hath divorc'd
So many English kings. Henry IV.

RIGOUR. n. f. [rigor, Latin.]

1. Cold; stiffness.

The rest his look
Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move. Milton.

2. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold.

Rigors, chills, and a fever attend every such new supposition. Blackmore.

A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease: during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation. Arbutnot.

3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others.

Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turned to grief and pity. Denham.

Rigour makes it difficult for sliding virtue to recover. Clarissa.

4. Severity of life; voluntary pain; austerity.

He resumed his rigors, esteeming this calamity such a one as should not be outlived, but that it became men to be martyrs to. Fell.

VOL. II.

R I M

Does not looseness of life, and a want of necessary sobriety in some, drive others into rigors that are unnecessary? Spratt.

This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison.

5. Strictness; unabated exactness.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

Heat and cold are not, according to philosophical rigor, the efficient; but are names expressing our passions. Glanville.

The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigor:
This awes an impious bold offending world. Addison.

6. Rage; cruelty; fury.

He at his foe with furious rigor smites,
That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights,
That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Spenser.
Driven by the necessities of the times, and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigor of actions. King Charles.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness.

The stones the rigor of their kind expel,
And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.

RIGOROUS. adj. [from rigour.]

1. Severe; allowing no abatement.

He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial,
Than the severity of publick power. Shakspeare.
Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers.

2. Exact; scrupulously nice: as, a rigorous demonstration; a rigorous definition.

RIGOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.]

1. Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.

Left they faint
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
For I behold them soften'd, and with tears
Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton.
The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.

2. Exactly; scrupulously; nicely.

RILL. n. f. [rivulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet.

May thy brimmed waves from this
Their full tribute never miss,
From a thousand petty rills,
That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.
On every thorn delightful wildom grows,
In every rill a sweet instruction flows;
But some untaught, o'erhear the whispering rill,
In spite of sacred leisure blockheads still. Young.

To RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams.

Io! Apollo, mighty king, let envy,
Ill-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake,
Draw tuns unmeasurable; while thy favour Administers to my ambitious thirst
The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring
Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling
Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt. Prior.

RILLET. n. f. [corrupted from rivulet.]

A small stream.
A creeke of Ose, between two hills, delivering a little fresh rillet into the sea. Carew.
Th' industrious muse thus labours to relate
Those rilllets that attend proud Tamer and her state. Drayton.

RIM. n. f. [rima, Saxon.]

1. A border; a margin.

It keeps off the same thickness near its centre; while its figure is capable of variation towards the rim. Grew.

2. That which encircles something else.

We may not affirm, that ruptures are confinable unto one side, as the peritonæum or rim of the belly may be broke; or its perforations relaxed in either. Brown.

R I N

The drum-maker uses it for rimbs. Mortimer.

RIME. n. f. [hym, Saxon.]

1. Hoar frost.

Breathing upon a glass giveth a dew; and in rime frosts you shall find drops of dew upon the inside of glass windows. Bacon.

In a hoar frost, a rime is a multitude of quadrangular prisms piled without any order one over another. Grew.

2. [rima, Latin.] A hole; a chink. Not used.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet can they contract the rime or chink of their larynx, so as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown.

To RIME. v. n. [from the noun.] To freeze with hoar frost.

To RIMPLE. v. a. To pucker; to contract into corrugations. See CRUMPLE and RUMPLE.

The skin was tense, also rimpled and blistered. Wiseman.

RIMY. adj. [from rime.] Steamy; foggy; full of frozen mist.

The air is now cold, hot, dry, or moist; and then thin, thick, foggy, rimy, or poisonous. Harvey.

RIND. n. f. [rind, Saxon; rinde, Dutch.] Bark; husk.

Therewith a piteous yelling voice was heard,
Crying, O spare with guilty hands to tear
My tender sides in this rough rind embarr'd. Spenser.
Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakspeare.
These plants are neither red nor polished, when drawn out of the water, till their rind have been taken off. Boyle.

Others, whose fruit, burnish'd with golden rind, Hung amiable. Milton.

Thou can't not touch the freedom of this mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind.
Thou hast immanac'd. Milton.

This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view;
On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden.

To RIND. v. n. [from the noun.] To decorticate; to bark; to husk.

RING. n. f. [hping, Saxon.]

1. A circle; an orbicular line.

In this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
Their precious gems new lost. Shakspeare.

Bubbles of water, before they began to exhibit their colours to the naked eye, have appeared through a prism girded about with many parallel and horizontal rings. Newton.

2. A circle of gold, or some other matter worn as an ornament.

A quarrel,
—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakspeare.
I have seen old Roman rings so very thick about, and with such large stones in them, that 'tis no wonder a fop should reckon them a little cumbersome in the summer. Addison.

3. A circle of metal to be held by.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.
Some eagle got the ring of my box in his beak, with an intent to let it fall, and devour it. Swift.

4. A circular course.

Chaste Diana,
Goddess presiding o'er the rapid race,
Place me, O place me in the dusty ring,
Where youthful charioteers contend for glory! Smith.

5. A circle made by persons standing round.

Make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar,
And let me shew you him that made the will. Shakspeare.
The Italians, perceiving themselves almost environed, cast themselves into a ring, and retired back into the city. Hayward.

R I N

- Round my arbour a new ring they made,
And footed it about the sacred shade. Dryden.
6. A number of bells harmonically tuned.
A squirrel spends his little rage,
In jumping round a rowling cage;
The cage as either side turn'd up,
Striking a ring of bells a-top. Prior.
7. The sound of bells, or any other sonorous body.
Stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.
Hawks bells, that have holes, give a greater ring, than if the pellet did strike upon brass in the open air. Bacon.
Sullen Moloch fled,
Hath left in shadows dread
His burning idol all of blackest hue;
In vain with cymbals ring,
They call the grisly king. Milton.
8. A sound of any kind.
The king, full of confidence, as he had been victorious in battle, and had prevailed with his parliament, and had the ring of acclamations fresh in his ears, thought the rest of his reign should be but play.
Bacon.
- To RING. v. a. pret. and part pass. ring.
[hpringan, Saxon.]
1. To strike bells, or any other sonorous body, so as to make it sound.
Ring the alarm bell. Shakspeare.
2. [from ring.] To encircle.
Talbot,
Who, ring'd about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset. Shakspeare.
3. To fit with rings.
Death, death; oh amiable lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench, sound rottenness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms.
Shakspeare.
4. To restrain a hog by a ring in his nose.
To RING. v. n.
1. To sound as a bell or sonorous metal.
Ring out, ye crystal spheres,
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time;
And let the base of heav'n's deep organ blow. Milt.
No funeral rites nor man in mournful weeds,
Nor mournful bell shall ring her burial. Shakspeare.
Easy it might be to ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.
At Latagus a weighty stone he flung;
His face was flatted, and his helmet ring. Dryden.
2. To practise the art of making musick with bells.
Signs for communication may be contrived at pleasure: four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing; each change may, by agreement, have a certain signification. Holder.
3. To sound; to resound.
Hercules, missing his page, called him by his name aloud, that all the shore rang of it. Bacon.
The particular ringing sound in gold, distinct from the sound of other bodies, has no particular name. Locks.
With sweeter notes each rising temple ring,
A Raphael painted! and a Vida sung!
Immortal Vida! Pope.
4. To utter as a bell.
Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath ring night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakspeare.
5. To tinkle.
My ears still ring with noise; I'm vex'd to death:
Tongue-kill'd, and have not yet recover'd breath.
Dryden.
6. To be filled with a bruit or report.
That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so *ring*s of, are not indeed, what they vote themselves, the wisest men in the world.
South.

RING-BONE. n. s.

R I O

- Ring-bone* is a hard callous substance growing in the hollow circle of the little pastern of a horse, just above the coronet; it sometimes goes quite round like a ring, and thence it is called the ringbone.
Farrier's Dictionary.

pure, clear.]
1. To wash; to cleanse by washing.
This last costly treaty
Swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' th' *rin*sing. Shakspeare.
Whomsoever he toucheth, and hath not *rin*sed
his hands in water, he shall be unclean. Leviticus.
This must move us humbly to sue unto God, and earnestly to entreat him, to wash us thoroughly from our wickedness, and cleanse us from our sins: yea, to purge and rinse the fountain thereof, our unclean and polluted hearts. Perkins.
2. To wash the soap out of clothes.
They cannot boil, nor wash, nor rinse, they say,
With water sometimes ink, and sometimes whey,
According as you meet with mud or clay. King.

washes or rinses; a washer.
- RIOT. n. s. [riotte, old French; riotto, Italian.]
1. Wild and loose festivity.
When his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
When means and lavish manners meet together,
Oh! with what wings shall his affection fly
Tow'rd fronting peril and oppos'd decay. Shakspeare.
So senseless of expence,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flow of riot. Shakspeare.
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feait and dance. Milton.
2. A sedition; an uproar.

R I P

- Transform'd to serpents all, as accessories
To his bold riot. Milton.
3. To run RIOT. To move or act without control or restraint.
One man's head runs riot upon hawks and dice.
L'Estrange.
You never can defend his breeding,
Who, in his satyre's running riot,
Could never leave the world in quiet. Swift.
- To RIOT. v. n. [riotte, old French.]
1. To revel; to be dissipated in luxurious enjoyments.
Let us walk honestly as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans.
Now he exacts of all, wastes in delight,
Riots in pleasure, and neglects the law. Daniel.
2. To luxuriate; to be tumultuous.
Thy life a long dead calm of fix'd repose;
No pulse that riots, and no blood that glows. Pope.
3. To banquet luxuriously.
4. To raise a sedition or uproar.
- RIOTER. n. s. [from riot.]
1. One who is dissipated in luxury.
2. One who raises an uproar or sedition.

For contemplation sake; yet otherwise
His life he led in lawful riotise. Spenser.
- RIOTOUS. adj. [riotteux, Fr. from riot.]
1. Luxurious; wanton; licentious; festive.
What needs me tell their feasts and goodly guile,
In which was nothing riotous nor vain. Spenser.
When all our offices have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders,
I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow. Shakspeare.
John came neither eating nor drinking, that is, far from the diet of Jerusalem, and other riotous places, but far'd coarsely. Brown.
With them no riotous pomp nor Asian train,
T' infect a navy with their gaudy fears;
But war severely like itself appears. Dryden.
2. Seditious; turbulent.
- RIOTOUSLY. adv. [from riotous.]
1. Luxuriously; with licentious luxury.
He that gathereth by defrauding his own soul, ga-thereth for others that shall spend his goods riotously.
Ecclesiasticus.

Upon the candle's going out, there is a sudden rife of water; for the flame filling no more place, the air and water succeed. Bacon.

The hill submits itself
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rife not hinders, but makes short our way.
Dryden.

4. Place that favours the act of mounting aloft.

Rais'd so high, from that convenient rife
She took her flight, and quickly reach'd the skies.
Creech.

Since the arguments against them rise from common received opinions, it happens, in controversial discourses, as it does in the assaulting of towns, where, if the ground be but firm, whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther inquiry of whom it is borrowed, so it affords but a fit rife for the present purpose. Locke.

5. Elevated place.

Such a rife, as deth at once invite
A pleasure, and a reverence from the sight. Denham.

6. Appearance as of the sun in the east.

Active Aurora; where she loves to dance. Chapman.

RISIBILITY. n. f. [from risible.] The quality of laughing.

How comes lowliness of stile to be so much the propriety of satyr, that without it a poet can be no more a satyrift, than without risibility he can be a man. Dryden.

Whatever the philosophers may talk of their rifi- bility, neighing is a more noble expression than laughing. Arbutnot.

RISIBLE. adj. [risible, Fr. risibilis, Lat.]

1. Having the faculty or power of laughing.

We are in a merry world, laughing is our business;
as if, because it has been made the definition of man that he is risible, his manhood consisted in nothing else. Government of the Tongue.

2. Ridiculous; exciting laughter.

RISK. n. f. [risque, Fr. riesgo, Spanish.] Hazard; danger; chance of harm.

Like honour claims. Dryden.

You bark to be employ'd,
While Venus is by rival dogs enjoyed. Dryden.

To RIVAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stand in competition with another; to oppose.

Those, that have been raised by the interest of some great minister, trample upon the steps by which they rise, to rival him in his greatness, and at length step into his place. South.

2. To emulate; to endeavour to equal or excel.

Ambitious fool! with horny hoofs to pass
O'er hollow arches of resounding brass;
To rival thunder in its rapid course,
And imitate inimitable force. Dryden.

O thou, too great to rival or to praise,
Forgive, lamented shade, these duteous lays.
Lee had thy fire, and Congreve had thy wit;
And copyist, here and there, some likeness hit;
But none possess'd thy graces, and thy ease;
In thee alone 'twas natural to please! Harte.

To RIVAL. v. n. To be competitors. Out of use.

Burgundy,
We first address'd tow'rd you, who with this king
Have rival'd for our daughter. Shakspeare.

RIVALITY. } n. f. [rivalitas, Lat. from RIVALRY. } rival.] Competition; emulation.

The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakspeare.

Thy armour
I'll frush, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shakspeare.

Though Valeria's fair, and though she loves me too,
'Gainst her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart,
Where Berenice's charms have found the way,
Subtle as lightnings. Dryden.

The verse in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no sight can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd. Dryden.

The rivets of those wings inclos'd Fit not each other. Dryden.

This instrument should move easy upon the rivet. Sharp.

To RIVET. v. a. [from the noun.]

Screw'd to my mem'ry? Shakspeare.

What one party thought to rivet to a settledness by the influence of the Scots, that the other rejects. King Charles.

Till fortune's fruitless spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but riveted his throne. Dryden.

Thus hath God not only riveted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being, necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Tillotson.

If the eye sees those things riveted which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake? Locke.

Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet. Locke.

Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye pow'rs!
Congreve.

They provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse, Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

A similitude of nature and manners, in such a degree as we are capable of, must tie the holy knot, and rivet the friendship between us, Atterbury.

3. To drive or clench a rivet.
In rivetting, the pin you rivet in should stand upright to the plate you rivet it upon; for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is riveted. Moxon.

RIVULET. n. f. [rivulus, Lat.] A small river; a brook; a streamlet.

By fountain or by shady rivulet,
He fought them. Milton.

about four shillings and sixpence sterling. Diet.

ROACH. n. f. [from rutilus, Lat. red-haired.]

A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his dainty taste: his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the water sheep, for his simplicity and foolishness; and it is noted, that roaches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Walton.

If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.

ROAD. n. f. [rade, Fr. route, Fr. route is via trita.]

1. Large way; path.

Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom. Shakspeare.

ROD. n. f. [roede, Dutch.]

1. A long twig.

Some chuse a hazle rod of the same year's shoot, and this they bind on to another straight stick of any wood, and walking softly over those places, where they suspect the bowels of the earth to be enriched with metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.

2. A kind of sceptre.

Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace. Shakspeare.
The past'ral reed of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton.

O gentle sleep, I cry'd,
Why is thy gift to me alone deny'd?
Mildest of beings, friend to ev'ry clime,
Where lies my error, what has been my crime?
Beasts, birds and cattle feel thy balmy rod;
The drowsy mountains wave, and seem to nod:
The torrents cease to chide, the seas to roar,
And the hush'd waves recline upon the shore. Harte.

3. Any thing long and slender.

Let the fisherman
Increase his tackle, and his rod retie. Gay.
Haste, ye Cyclops, with your forked rods,
This rebel love braves all the gods,
And every hour by love is made,
Some heaven defying Enclade. Granville.

I am not in the roll of common men. Shakespeare.

The rolls and list of that army doth remain. Davies.

Of that short roll of friends writ in my heart,
There's none, that sometimes greet us not. Donne.

'Tis a mathematical demonstration, that these twenty-four letters admit of so many changes in their order, and make such a long roll of differently ranged alphabets, not two of which are alike; that they could not all be exhausted, though a million millions of writers should each write about a thousand alphabets a-day, for the space of a million millions of years. Bentley.

8. Chronicle.
Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

Shak.

RO'NT. n. f. An animal stunted in the growth: commonly pronounced runt.

My ragged ronts all shiver and shake,

As done high towers in an earthquake;

They wont in the wind, wag their wriggle tails,

Peck as a peacock, but nought it avails.

Spenser.

ROOD. n. f. [from rod.]

1. The fourth part of an acre in square measure, or one thousand two hundred and ten square yards.

I've often wish'd that I had clear,

For life, six hundred pounds a year,

A terras-walk, and half a rood

Of land, set out to plant a wood.

Swift.

No stately larch-tree there expands a shade

O'er half rood of Lariffian glade.

Harte.

2. A pole; a measure of sixteen feet and a half in long measure.

Satan,

With head uplift 'bove the wave, his other parts

Prone on the flood, extended long and large,

Lay floating many a rood.

Milton.

For stone fences in the north, they dig the stones for eighteen-pence a rood, and make the walls for the same price, reckoning twenty-one foot to the rood or pole.

Mortimer.

3. [node, Sax.] The cross; sometimes an image of a saint.

By the holy rood,

I do not like these several councils.

Shakspere.

or images were set to view.

ROOF. n. f. [hrop, Saxon. In the plural
Sidney has rooves: now obsolete.]

1. The cover of a house.

Her shoulders be like two white doves,

Perching within square royal rooves.

Sidney.

Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd?

No, rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse

To wage against the enmity o' th' air.

Shakspere.

2. The house in general.

I'll tell all strictly true,

If time, and foode, and wine enough accrue

Within your roofs to us; that freely we May sit and banquet.

Chapman.

3. The vault; the inside of the arch that covers a building.

From the magnanimity of the Jews, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever match.

Hooker.

The dust

Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,

Rais'd by your populous troops.

Shakspere.

In thy fane, the dusty spoils among,

High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung.

Dryden.

4. The palate; the upper part of the mouth.

Swearing till my very roof was dry

With oaths of love.

Shakspere.

My very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me.

Shakspere.

Some fishes have rows of teeth in the roofs of their mouths; as pikes, salmons, and trouts.

Bacon.

To ROOF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a roof.

He enter'd soon the shade

High roof, and walks beneath, and alleys brown.

Milton.

Whether to roofy houses they repair,

Or fun themselves abroad in open air,

In all abodes of pestilential kind

To sheep.

Dryden.

ROOK. n. f. [hroc, Sax.]

1. A bird resembling a crow: it feeds not on carrion, but grain.

Augurs, that understood relations, have,

By magpies, and by choughs, and rooks, brought forth

The secret'st man of blood.

Shakspere.

Huge flocks of rising rooks forsake their food,

And crying seek the shelter of the wood.

Dryden.

The jay, the rook, the daw

Aid the full concert.

Thomson.

2. [rocco, Italian.] A common man at chefs.

So have I seen a king on chefs,

His rooks and knights withdrawn,

His queen and bishops in distress,

Shifting about grow less and less,

With here and there a pawn.

Dryden.

3. A cheat; a trickish rapacious fellow.

I am, like an old rook, who is ruined by gaming, forced to live on the good fortune of the pulping young men.

Wycherley.

To ROOK. v. n. [from the noun.] To rob; to cheat.

They rook'd upon us with design,

To out-reform and undermine.

Hudibras.

How any one's being put into a mixed herd of unruly boys, and there learning to rook at span-farthing, fits him for conversation, I do not see.

Locke.

ROO'KRY. n. f. [from rook.] A nursery of rooks.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court.

Pope.

ROO'KY. adj. [from rook.] Inhabited by rooks.

Light thickens, and the crow

Makes wing to th' rocky wood.

Shakspere.

ROOM. n. f. [num, Sax. rums, Gothick]

1. Space; extent of place great or small.

With new wonder, now he views,

To all delight of human sense expos'd

In narrow room, nature's whole wealth.

Milton.

If you will have a young man to put his travels into a little room, and in short time gather much, this he must do.

Bacon.

2. Space or place unoccupied.

The dry land is much too big for its inhabitants;
and that before they shall want room by encreasing and multiplying, there may be new heavens and a new earth.

Bentley.

3. Way unobstructed.

Make room, and let him stand before our face.

Shakspere.

What train of servants, what extent of field,

Shall aid the birth, or give him room to build?

Creech.

ROO

This paternal regal power, being by divine right, leaves no room for human prudence to place it any where. Locke.

4. Place of another; stead.

In evils, that cannot be removed without the manifest danger of greater to succeed in their rooms, wisdom of necessity must give place to necessity. Hooker.

For better ends our kind Redeemer dy'd,
Or the fallen angels rooms will be but ill supply'd. Roscommon.

By contributing to the contentment of other men, and rendering them as happy as lies in our power, we do God's work, are in his place and room. Calamy.

5. Unobstructed opportunity.

When this princess was in her father's court, she was so celebrated, that there was no prince in the empire, who had room for such an alliance, that was not ambitious of gaining her into his family. Addison.

It puts us upon so eager a pursuit of the advantages of life, as leaves no room to reflect on the great author of them. Atterbury.

6. Possible admission; possible mode.

Will you not look with pity on me?
Is there no hope? is there no room for pardon? A. Phillips.

7. An apartment in a house; so much of a house as is enclosed within partitions.

I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks. Shakspeare.

If when she appears in th' room,
Thou dost not quake, and art struck dumb;
Know this,
Thou lov'st amiss;
And to love true,
Thou must begin again, and love anew. Suckling.

In a prince's court, the only question a man is to ask is, whether it be the custom of the court, or will of the prince, to be uncovered in some rooms and not in to others! Stillingfleet.

It will afford me a few pleasant rooms, for such a friend as yourself, Pope.

ROO'MAGE. n. s. [from room.] Space; place.

Man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion, for the lodging of the intellectual faculties: it must be a silent character of hope, when there is good store of roomage and receipt, where those powers are stowed. Wotton.

ROO'MINESS. n. s. [from roomy.] Space; quantity of extent.

ROO'MY. adj. [from room.] Spacious; wide; large.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length. Dryden.

Which after-ages call Hybernian fruit. Harte.

4. The original; the first cause.

The love of money is the root of all evil, is a truth universally agreed in. Temple.

5. The first ancestor.

It was said,
That myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings. Shakspeare.

Why did my parents send me to the schools,
That I with knowledge might enrich my mind?
Since the desire to know first made men fools,
And did corrupt the root of all mankind. Davies.

Whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root. Milton.

They were the roots, out of which sprang two distinct people, under two distinct governments. Locke.

6. Fixed residence.

7. Impression; durable effect.

Having this way eased the church, as they thought, of superfluity, they went on till they had plucked up even those things also, which had taken a great deal stronger and deeper root. Hooker.

That love took deepest root, which first did grow. Dryden.

To ROOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fix the root; to strike far into the earth.

Here fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakspeare.

ROPE. n. s. [nap, Saxon; roep, roep, Dutch.]

1. A cord; a string; a halter; a cable; a halser.

Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope,
And told thee to what purpose. Shakspeare.

An anchor let down by a rope, maketh a sound;
and yet the rope is no solid body, whereby the sound can ascend. Bacon.

Who would not guess there might be hopes,
The fear of gallowses and ropes
Before their eyes, might reconcile Their animosities a while. Hudibras.

Hang yourself up in a true rope, that there may appear no trick in it. Arbutnot.

2. Any row of things depending: as, a rope of onions.

I cannot but confess myself mightily surprized, that, in a book, which was to provide chains for all mankind, I should find nothing but a rope of sand. Locke.

To ROPE. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw out into viscosities; to concrete into glutinous filaments.

Such bodies partly follow the touch of another body, and partly stick to themselves: and therefore rope and draw themselves into threads; as pitch, glue, and birdlime. Bacon.

In this close vessel place the earth accurs'd,
But fill'd brimful with wholesome water first,
Then run it through, the drops will rope around. Dryden.

RO'PEDANCER. n. s. [rope and dancer.]

An artist who dances on a rope.

Salvian, amongst publick shews, mentions the Petaminarii; probably derived from the Greek πετασθαι, to fly, and may refer to such kind of ropedancers. Wilkins.

Statius, posted on the highest of the two summits, the people regarded with terror, as they look upon a daring ropedancer, whom they expect to fall every moment. Addison.

Nic bounced up with a spring equal to that of one of your nimblest tumblers or ropedancers, and fell foul upon John Bull, to snatch the cudgel he had in his hand. Arbutnot.

RO'PEMAKER, or ROPER. n. s. [rope and maker.] One who makes ropes to sell.

The ropemaker bear me witness,
That I was sent for nothing but a rope. Shakspeare.

the common mallow. Miller.

RO'SEMARY. n. f. [rosemarinus, Latin.] A verticillate plant. Miller.

Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Inforce their charity. Shakspeare.

Around their cell
Set rows of rosemary with flowering stem. Dryden.
Roemary is small, but a very odoriferous shrub;
the principal use of it is to perfume chambers, and in decoctions for washing. Mortimer.

The neighbours
Follow'd with wistful look the damsel bier, Sprigg'd rosemary the lads and lasses bore. Gay.

ROSE-NOBLE. n. f. An English gold coin,
in value anciently sixteen shillings.

Weary of aged Tithon's saffron bed,
Had spread her purple robe through dewy air. Spenser.

A smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.

Fairest blossom! do not slight
That age, which you may know so soon;
The rosy morn resigns her light,
And milder glory to the noon. Waller.

As Thessalian steeds the race adorn,
So rosy colour'd Helen is the pride
Of Lacedemon, and of Greece beside. Dryden.

While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy rosy cheeks confest,
Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this destin'd breast. Prior.

To ROT. v. n. [rotan, Sax. rotten, Dut.]

4. AT ROVERS. Without any particular aim.
Nature ſhoots not at rovers: even inanimates, though they know not their perfection, yet are they not carried on by a blind unguided impetus; but that, which directs them, knows it. Glanville.
Providence never ſhoots at rovers: there is an arrow that flies by night as well as by day, and God is the perſon that ſhoots it. South.
Men of great reading ſhow their talents on the meanest ſubjects; this is a kind of ſhooting at rovers. Addiſon.

She called for a round sum out of the privy purse. Hooker.

7. Plain; clear; fair; candid; open.

Round dealing is the honour of man's nature; and a mixture of falsehood is like alloy in gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth it. Bacon.

8. Quick; brisk.

Painting is a long pilgrimage; if we do not actually begin the journey, and travel at a round rate, we shall never arrive at the end of it. Dryden.

Sir Roger heard them upon a round trot; and after pausing, told them, that much might be said on both sides. Addison.

9. Plain; free without delicacy or reserve; almost rough.

Let his queen mother all alone intreat him,
To shew his griefs; let her be round with him. Shakspeare.

The kings interposed in a round and princely manner; not only by way of request and persuasion, but also by way of protestation and menace. Bacon.

ROUND. n. s.

1. A circle; a sphere; an orb.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysick aid doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakspeare.

I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antick round. Shakspeare.

Three or four we'll dress like urchins,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands. Shakspeare.

Hirsute roots are a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon.

What if the sun
Be centre to the world; and other stars
By his attractive virtue and their own
Incited, dance about him various rounds. Milton.
Knit your hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastick round. Milton.
He did foretel and prophesy of him,
Who to his realms and azure round hath join'd. Denham.

They meet, they wheel, they throw their darts afar;

Then in a round the mingled bodies run;
Flying they follow, and pursuing shun. Dryden.
How shall I then begin, or where conclude,
To draw a fame so truly circular?

For, in a round, what order can be shew'd,
Where all the parts so equal perfect are? Dryden.
The mouth of Vesuvio has four hundred yards in diameter; for it seems a perfect round. Addison.
This image on the medal plac'd,
With its bright round of titles grac'd,
And stamp'd on British coins shall live. Addison.

2. Rundle; step of a ladder.

When he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend. Shakspeare.
Many are kicked down ere they have climbed the two or three first rounds of the ladder.

Government of the Tongue.
All the rounds like Jacob's ladder rise;
The lowest hid in earth, the topmost in the skies. Dryden.

This is the last stage of human perfection, the utmost round of the ladder whereby we ascend to heaven. Norris.

3. The time in which any thing has passed through all hands, and comes back to the first: hence applied to a carousal.

A gentle round fill'd to the brink,
To this and t' other friend I drink. Suckling.
Women to cards may be compar'd; we play
A round or two; when us'd, we throw away. Gramville.

The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.

4. A revolution; a course ending at the point where it began.

We, that are of purer fire,
Imitate the flarry quire,
Who, in their nightly watchful spheres,
Lead in swift rounds the months and years. Milton.

No end can to this be found,

'Tis nought but a perpetual fruitless round. Cowley.

If nothing will please people, unless they be greater than nature intended, what can they expect,
but the ass's round of vexatious changes? L'Estrange.

How then to drag a wretched life beneath
And endless round of still returning woes,
And all the gnawing pangs of vain remorse?
What torment's this? Smith.

Some preachers, prepared only upon two or three points, run the same round from one end of the year to another. Addison.

Till by one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Compell'd our common impotence to mourn, Thus through the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

5. Rotation; succession in vicissitude.

Such new Utopians would have a round of government, as some the like in the church, in which every spoke becomes uppermost in his turn. Holyday.

equivocal sense, if possible. Trevoux.

Siker, like a roundel never heard I none,
Little lacketh Perigot of the best,

And Willie is not greatly over-gone,
So weren his under-songs well addrest. Spenser.

To hear thy rimes and roundelays,
Which thou wert wont in wastful hills to sing,

I more delight than lark in summer days,
Whose echo made the neighb'ring groves to ring.
Spenser.

Come now, a roundel and a fairy song. Shakspeare.

The muses and graces made festivals; the fawns, fatyrs, and nymphs did dance their roundelays.
Howel.

They list'ning heard him, while he search'd the grove,

And loudly sung his roundelay of love,
But on the sudden stop'd. Dryden.

To RUE. v. a. [neoprian, Saxon.] To grieve for; to regret; to lament.

Thou temptest me in vain;
To tempt the thing which daily yet I rue,
And the old cause of my continued pain,
With like attempts to like end to renew. Spenser.

You'll rue the time,
That clogs me with this answer. Shakspeare.

France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,
If Talbot but survive. Shakspeare.

Oh! treacherous was that breast, to whom you Didst trust our counsels, and we both may rue, Having his falsehood found too late, 'twas he
That made me cast you guilty, and you me. Donne.

R U F

Thy will Chose freely what it now so justly rues. Milton.
RUE. n. f. [rue, French; ruta, Latin.]
An herb called herb of grace, because holy water was sprinkled with it. Miller.
What favor is better,
For places infected, than wormwood and rue?
Tusser.
Here did she drop a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, four herb of grace;
Rue, even for Ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen. Shaksp.
The weasel, to encounter the serpent, arms herself with eating of rue. More.
RUEFUL. adj. [rue and full.] Mournful;
woful; sorrowful.

worn about the neck. See RUFFLE.
You a captain; for what? for tearing a whore's ruff in a bawdy house. Shaksp.
We'll revel it,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and fardingals. Shaksp.
Like an uproar in the town,
Before them every thing went down,
Some tore a ruff, and some a gown. Drayton.
Sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Donne.
The ladies freed the neck from those yokes, those linen ruffs in which the simplicity of their grandmothers had enclosed it. Addison's Guardian.
2. Any thing collected into puckers or corrugations.
I rear'd this flow'r,
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread. Pope.
3. [from rough scales.] A small river fish.
A ruff or pope is much like the perch for shape, and taken to be better, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon; he is an excellent fish, and of a pleasant taste. Walton.
4. A state of roughness. Obsolete.
As fields set all their bristles up; in such a ruff
wert thou. Chapman.
5. New state. This seems to be the meaning of this cant word, unless it be contracted from ruffle.
How many princes that, in the ruff of all their glory, have been taken down from the head of a conquering army to the wheel of the victor's char-riot! L'Estrange.
RUFFIAN. n. f. [ruffiano, Italian; ruffien, French, a bawd; roffver, Danish, to pillage; perhaps it may be best derived from the old Teutonic word which we now write, rough.] A brutal, boisterous, mischievous fellow; a cut-throat; a robber; a murderer.
Have you a ruffian that will swear? drink? dance?
Revel the night? rob? murder? Shaksp.
Sir Ralph Vane's bold answers, termed rude and ruffian like, falling into years apt to take offence, furthered his condemnation. Hayward.

R U F

The boasted ancestors of these great men,
Whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians;
This dread of nations, this almighty Rome,
That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds
All under heaven, was founded on a rape. Addison.
RUFFIAN. adj. Brutal; savagely boisterous.
Experienc'd age
May timely intercept the ruffian rage;
Convene the tribes. Pope.
TO RUFFIAN. v. n. [from the noun.]
To rage; to raise tumults; to play the ruffian. Not in use.
A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise? Shaksp.
TO RUFFLE. v. a. [ruyffelen, Dutch, to wrinkle.]
1. To disorder; to put out of form; to make less smooth.
Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favour
You should not ruffle thus. Shaksp.
In changeable taffeties, differing colours emerge and vanish upon the ruffling of the same piece of silk.
Boyle.
As the first began to rise,
She smooth'd the ruffled seas, and clear'd the skies.
Dryden.
Bear me, some god! oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense;
Where contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul looks down to pity kings. Pope.
2. To discompose; to disturb; to put out of temper.
Were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny. Shaksp.
We are transported by passions, and our minds ruffled by the disorders of the body; nor yet can we tell, how the soul should be affected by such kind of agitations. Glanville.
3. To put out of order; to surprise.
The knight found out
Th' advantage of the ground, where best
He might the ruffled foe infect. Hudibras.
4. To throw disorderly together.
Within a thicket I repos'd, when round
I ruff'd up fall'n leaves in heap, and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.

Loud rung the ruin, and with boistrous fear,
Strait revel'd in the queen's amazed ear. Beaumont.
2. The remains of building demolished.
The Veian and the Gabian tow'rs shall fall,
And one promiscuous ruin cover all;
Nor, after length of years, a stone betray
The place where once the very ruins lay. Addison.
Judah shall fall, oppress'd by grief and shame,
And men shall from her ruins know her fame. Prior.
Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made Materials for a house decay'd. Swift.
3. Destruction; loss of happiness or fortune; overthrow.
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leapt from his eyes. Shakspeare.
Those whom God to ruin has design'd,
He fits for fate, and first destroys their mind. Dryden.

man, who falling before the queen of the fairies, desired that he might have the achievement of any adventure, which, during the feast, might happen;
that being granted, he rested him on the floor, unfit for a better place by his rusticity. Spenser.

R U T

The sweetness and rusticity of a pastoral cannot be so well express'd in any other tongue as in the Greek, when rightly mixt with the Dorick dialect. Addison.

This so general expence of their time would curtail the ordinary means of knowledge, as 'twould shorten the opportunities of vice; and so accordingly an universal rusticity presently took place, and stopped not till it had over-run the whole stock of mankind. Woodward.

2. Rural appearance.

RU'STICK. adj. [rusticus, Latin; rustique, French.]

S A B

S Has in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilation. In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like z, as rose, roseate, rosy, osier, nosel, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as loose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given. In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this; and sometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where es stands in verbs for eth, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with s single: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the s is doubled, and was once ffe, as ass, anciently asse; wildernefs, anciently wildernesse; distress, anciently distresse.

SABA'OTH. n. f. [Hebrew.] Signifying an army.

Holy Lord God of sabaoth; that is, Lord of hosts. Common Prayer.

SAB'BATH. n. f. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, Fr. sabbatum, Lat.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for publick worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.

I purpose,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shaksp.
Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
Ere sabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil releas'd,
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as that one she now enjoys,
Ev'n that perpetual one, which she employs:
For such vicissitudes in heav'n there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.

2. Intermision of pain or sorrow; time of rest.

Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.
Nor can his blessed soul look down from heav'n,
Or break the eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.
Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.

SA'CRAMENT. n. s. [sacrament, Fr. sacramentum, Lat.]

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our restraint of the word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony two things, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, somewhat else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament. Hooker.

3. The eucharist; the holy communion. Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament To rive their dangerous artillery Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shakspeare.

As we have ta'en the sacrament, We will unite the white rose with the red. Shakspeare.

Before the famous battle of Cressy, he spent the greatest part of the night in prayer; and in the morning received the sacrament, with his son, and the chief of his officers. Addison.

SACRAME'NTAL. adj. [sacramental, Fr. from sacrament.] Constituting a sacrament; pertaining to a sacrament.

To make complete the outward substance of a sacrament, there is required an outward form, which form sacramental elements receive from sacramental words. Hooker.

The words of St. Paul are plain; and whatever interpretation can be put upon them, it can only vary the way of the sacramental efficacy, but it cannot evacuate the blessing. Taylor.

SACRAME'NTALLY. adv. [from sacramental.] After the manner of a sacrament. My body is sacramentally contained in this sacrament of bread. Hall.

The law of circumcision was meant by God sacramentally to impress the duty of strict purity. Hammond.

SA'CRED. adj. [sacre, Fr. sacer, Lat.]

S A F

If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors.

Shakspeare.

Cæsar, where dangers threatened on the one side, and the opinion that there should be in him little safeguard for his friends on the other, chose rather to venture upon extremities than to be thought a weak protector.

Raleigh.

Great numbers, descended from them, have, by the blessing of God upon their industry, raised themselves so high in the world as to become, in times of difficulty, a protection and a safeguard to that altar, at which their ancestors ministered.

Atterbury.

Thy sword, the safeguard of thy brother's throne,
Is now become the bulwark of thy own.

Granville.

of saffron.

Peacham.

SA'FFRON, Bastard. n. f. [carthamus, Lat.]
A plant.

This plant agrees with the thistle in most of its characters; but the seeds of it are destitute of down.
It is cultivated in Germany for dyers. It spreads into many branches, each producing a flower, which, when fully blown, is pulled off, and dried, and it is the part the dyers use.

Miller.

SA'FFRON. adj. Yellow; having the colour
of saffron.

Are these your customers?
Did this companion, with the saffron face,
Revel and feast it at my house to-day,
Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut?

Shakspeare.

S A G

Soon as the white and red mixt finger'd dame
Had gilt the mountains with her saffron flame,
I sent my men to Circe's house.

Chapman.

Now when the rosy morn began to rise,
And wav'd her saffron streamer through the skies.

Dryden.

SAGA'CITY. n. f. [sagacité, French;
sagacitas, Latin.]

1. Quickness of scent.

2. Acuteness of discovery.

It requires too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line nicely between virtue and vice.

South.

Sagacity finds out the intermediate ideas, to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together.

Locke.

Many were eminent in former ages for their discovery of it; but though the knowledge they have left be worth our study, yet they have left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages.

Locke.

said. Shakspeare.

SA'INFOIN. n. s. [sainfoin, Fr. medica.]
A kind of herb.

SAINT. n. s. [saint, Fr. sanctus, Lat.] A person eminent for piety and virtue.

To thee be worship and thy saints for aye. Shakspeare.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor ope her lap to saint seducing gold. Shakspeare.

Then thus I cloath my naked villany
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ,
And seem a saint when most I play the devil. Shakspeare.

Miracles are required of all who aspire to this dignity, because they say an hypocrite may imitate a saint in all other particulars. Addison.

By thy example kings are taught to sway,
Heroes to fight, and saints may learn to pray. Gran.

So unaffected, so compos'd a mind;
So firm, yet soft, so strong, yet so refin'd,
Heav'n, as its purest gold, by tortures try'd;
The saint sustain'd it, but the woman dy'd. Pope.

To SAINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To number among saints; to reckon among saints by a publick decree; to canonize.

Are not the principles of those wretches still owned, and their persons sainted, by a race of men of the same stamp. South.

Over-against the church stands a large hospital,
erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified,
though never sainted. Addison.

Thy place is here, sad sister; come away:

Once, like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd;

Love's victim then, though now a sainted maid. Pope.

To SAINT. v. n. To act with a show of piety.

SA'INTED. adj. [from saint.]
1. Holy; pious; virtuous.

Thy royal father

Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspeare.

2. Holy; sacred.

I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted,
By your renouncement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity
As with a saint. Shakspeare.

The crown virtue gives,
After this mortal change, to her true servants,
Amongst the enthron'd gods on sainted hills. Milt.

plant.

SA'INTLIKE. adj. [saint and like.]

1. Suiting a saint; becoming a saint.

If still thou do'st retain

The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saintlike show,
Still thou art bound to vice. Dryden.

2. Resembling a saint.

The king, in whose time it passed, whom catholicks count a saintlike and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

SA'INTLY. adj. [from saint.] Like a saint;
becoming a saint.

I mention still

Him whom thy wrongs, with saintly patience borne,
Made famous in a land and times obscure. Milton.

SA'INTSHIP. n. s. [from saint.] The character or qualities of a saint.

He that thinks his saintship licenses him to censures, is to be looked on not only as a rebel, but an usurper. Decay of Piety.

This favours something ranker than the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded upon saintship. South.

The devil was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him. Pope.

SAKE. n. s. [rac, Sax. saecke, Dutch.]
1. Final cause; end; purpose.

Thou neither do'st persuade me to seek wealth
For empire's sake, nor empire to affect
For glory's sake. Milton.

The prophane person serves the devil for nought,
and sins only for sin's sake. Tillotson.

Wyndham like a tyrant throws the dart,
And takes a cruel pleasure in the smart;
Proud of the ravage that her beauties make,
Delights in wounds, and kills for killing's sake. Granville.

2. Account; regard to any person or thing.

Would I were young for your sake, mistress Anne!

The general so likes your musick, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it. Shakspeare.

SA'KER. n. s. [Saker originally signifies a hawk, the pieces of artillery being often denominated from birds of prey.]

The cannon, blunderbuss, and saker,
He was th' inventor of, and maker. Hudibras.

According to observations made with one of her majesty's sakers, and a very accurate pendulum
chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies
five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds, which is a mile in a little above seventeen half seconds. Derham.

of a saker-hawk.

This kind of hawk is esteemed next after the falcon and gyr-falcon. Bailey.

SAL. n. s. [Latin.] Salt. A word often used in pharmacy.

Salsoacids will help its passing off; as sal prunel.

Sal gem is so called from its breaking frequently into gem-like squares. It differs not in property from the common salt of the salt springs, or that of the sea, when all are equally pure. Woodward.

Sal Ammoniac is found still in Ammonia, as mentioned by the ancients, and from whence it had its name. Woodward.

SALA'CIOUS. adj. [salacis, Lat. salace,
Fr.] Lustful; lecherous.

One more salacious, rich, and old,
Out-bids, and buys her. Dryden.

Feed him with herbs
Of generous warmth, and of salacious kind. Dryd.

Animals spleen'd, grow extremely salacious. Arbutnot.

SALA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from salacious.]
Lecherously; lustfully.

SALA'CITY. n. s. [salacitas, Latin: from salacious.] Lust; lechery.

produces salacity. Floyer.

SA'LAD. n. s. [salade, Fr. salact, German.] Food of raw herbs. It has been always pronounced familiarly fallet.

I climbed into this garden to pick a salad, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach. Shakspeare.

My fallet days,
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood. Shakspeare.

You have, to rectify your palate,
An olive, capers, or some better salad,
Ush'ring the mutton. Ben Jonson.

Some coarse cold salad is before thee set;
Fall on. Dryden.

The happy old Corician's fruits and salads, on which he lived contented, were all of his own growth. Dryden.

Leaves, eaten raw, are termed salad: if boiled,
they become potherbs; and some of those plants which are potherbs in one family, are salad in another. Watts.

SALAMA'NDER. n. s. [salamandre, Fr.
salamandra, Latin.] An animal supposed to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous. Ambrose Parey has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt for her bite; but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor
harmless insect.

The salamander liveth in the fire, and hath force
also to extinguish it. Bacon.

According to this hypothesis, the whole lunar
world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, except they are salamanders which dwell
therein. Glanville.

Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander
extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that
on hot coals it dieth immediately. Brown.

The artist was so encompassed with fire and smoke,
that one would have thought nothing but a sala- mander could have been safe in such a situation. Addison.

SALAMA'NDER'S Hair. } n. s. A kind of SALAMA'NDER'S Wool. } asbestos, or mineral flax.

There may be such candles as are made of sala- mander's wool, being a kind of mineral, which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

Of English tale; the coarser sort is called plaster or parget: the finer, spaad, earth flax, or salamander's
hair. Woodward.

SALAMA'NDRINE. adj. [from salamander.]
Resembling a salamander.

Laying it into a pan of burning coals, we observed
a certain salamandrine quality, that made it capable of living in the midst of fire, without being consumed or singed. Spectator.

SA'LARY. n. s. [salair, Fr. salarium,
Latin.]

1. Salarium, or salary, is derived from sal.
Arbutnot.

2. Stated hire; annual or periodical payment.

This is hire and salary, not revenge. Shakspeare.

Several persons, out of a salary of five hundred pounds, have always lived at the rate of two thousand. Swift.

SALE. n. s. [saal, Dutch.]

1. The act of selling.

2. Vent; power of selling; market.

Nothing doth more enrich any country than many towns; for the countrymen will be more industrious in tillage, and rearing of all husbandry commodities, knowing that they shall have ready sale for them at those towns. Spenser.

3. A publick and proclaimed exposition of goods to the market; auction.

Those that won the plate, and those thus sold,
ought to be marked so as they may never return to the rate, or to the sale. Temp.e.

4. State of being venal; price.

The other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods. Shakspeare.

Others more moderate seeming, but their aim Private reward; for which both God and State They'd set to sale. Milton.

The more money a man spends, the more must he endeavour to increase his stock; which at last sets the liberty of a commonwealth to sale. Addison.

5. It seems in Spenser to signify a wicker basket; perhaps from fallow, in which fishes are caught.

To make baskets of bulrushes was my wont; Who to entrap the fish in winding sale Was better seen? Spenser.

SALEABLE. adj. [from sale.] Vendible; fit for sale; marketable.

I can impute this general enlargement of saleable things to no cause sooner than the Cornishman's want of vent and money. Carew.

This vent is made quicker or slower, as greater or less quantities of any saleable commodity are removed out of the course of trade. Locke.

SALEABLENESS. n. f. [from saleable.] The state of being saleable.

SALIGOT. n. f. [tribulus aquaticus.] Water-thistle.

SALINE. adj. [salinus, Latin.] Con-
SALINOUS. adj. [sisting of salt; constituting salt.]

We do not easily ascribe their induration to cold; but rather unto salinous spirits and concretionary juices. Brown.

This saline sap of the vessels, by being refused reception of the parts, declares itself in a more hostile manner, by drying the radical moisture. Harvey.

If a very small quantity of any salt or vitriol be dissolved in a great quantity of water, the particles of the salt or vitriol will not sink to the bottom, though they be heavier in specie than the water, but will evenly diffuse themselves into all the water, so as to make it as saline at the top as at the bottom. Newton's Opticks.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbutnot.

SALIVARY. n. f. [Latin.] Every thing that is spit up; but it more strictly signifies that juice which is separated by the glands called salival. Quincy.

Not meeting with disturbance from the saliva, I the sooner extirpated them. Wiseman.

SALIVARY. adj. [from saliva.] Relating to spittle.

The woodpecker, and other birds that prey upon flies, which they catch with their tongue, in the room of the said glands have a couple of bags filled with a viscid humour, which, by small canals, like the salival, being brought into their mouths, they dip their tongues herein, and so with the help of this natural birdlime attack the prey. Grew.

The necessity of spittle to dissolve the aliment appears from the contrivance of nature in making the salivary ducts of animals which ruminate, extremely open: such animals as swallow their aliment without chewing, want salivary glands. Arbutnot.

TO SALIVATE. v. a. [from saliva, Latin.] To purge by the salival glands.

She was prepossessed with the scandal of salivating, and went out of town. Wiseman.

SALIVATION. n. f. [from salivate.] A method of cure much practised of late in venereal, scrophulous, and other obstinate cases, by promoting a secretion of spittle. Quincy.

Holding of ill-tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

SALIVOUS. adj. [from saliva.] Consisting of spittle; having the nature of spittle.

There happeneth an elongation of the uvula, through the abundance of salivous humour flowing upon it. Wiseman.

SALLET. n. f. [corrupted by pro-
SALLETING. n. f. [nunciation from salad.]

SALLIANCE. n. f. [from sally.] The act of issuing forth; sally. Not inelegant, but out of use.

Now mote I weat, Sir Guyon, why with so fierce salliance And fell intent, ye did at earst me meet. F. Queen.

SALLOW. n. f. [salix, Latin.] A tree of the genus of willow.

Sallows and reeds on banks of rivers born, Remain to cut to stay thy vines. Dryden.

SALLOW. adj. [salo, German, black; sale, French, foul.] Sickly; yellow.

What a deal of brine Hath wash't thy fallow cheeks for Rosaline? Shakspeare.

The scene of beauty and delight is chang'd: No roses bloom upon my fading cheek, Nor laughing graces wanton in my eyes; But haggard Grief, lean looking fallow Care, And pining Discontent, a rueful train, Dwell on my brow, all hideous and forlorn. Rowe.

SALLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Yellowness; sickly paleness.

A fish diet would give such a fallowness to the celebrated beauties of this island, as would scarce make them distinguishable from those of France. Addison.

SALLY. n. f. [salie, French.]

1. Eruption; issue from a place besieged; quick egress.

The deputy sat down before the town for the space of three winter months; during which time sallies were made by the Spaniards, but they were beaten in with loss. Bacon.

2. Range; excursion.

Everyone shall know a country better, that makes often sallies into it, and traverses it up and down, than he that, like a mill-horse, goes still round in the same track. Locke.

3. Flight; volatile or sprightly exertion. These passages were intended for sallies of wit; but whence comes all this rage of wit? Stillingfleet.

4. Escape; levity; extravagant flight; frolic; wild gayety; exorbitance.

At his return all was clear, and this excursion was esteemed but a sally of youth. Wotton.

'Tis but a sally of youth. Denham.

We have written some things which we may with never to have thought on: some sallies of levity ought to be imputed to youth. Swift.

The episodical part, made up of the extravagant sallies of the prince of Wales and Falstaff's humour, is of his own invention. Shakspeare Illustrated.

TO SALLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To make an eruption; to issue out.

The Turks sallying forth, received thereby great hurt. Knolles.

The noise of some tumultuous fight; They break the truce, and sally out by night. Dryden.

The summons take of the same trumpets call, To sally from one port, or man one public wall. Tate.

SALLYPORT. n. f. [sally and port.] Gate at which sallies are made.

My slippery soul had quit the fort, But that she stop'd the sallyport. Cleveland.

Love to our citadel resorts Through those deceitful sallyports, Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

SALMAGUNDI. n. f. [It is said to be corrupted from selon mon gout, or salé à mon goût.] A mixture of chopped meat and pickled herrings with oil, vinegar, pepper, and onions.

SALMON. n. f. [salmo, Lat. salmon, Fr.] A fish.

The salmon is accounted the king of fresh-water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet so far from it as admits no tincture of brackishness. He is said to cast his spawn in August: some say that then they dig a hole in a safe place in the gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, after the melter has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave it to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and to become salmonets early in the spring: they haste to the sea before winter, both the melter and spawner.—Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years. After he is got into the sea he becomes from a salmet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Walton.

They spoke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew.

They take salmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and so throw them on land. Carew.

Of fishes, you find in arms the whale, dolphin, salmon, and trout. Peacocks.

SALMONTROUT. n. f. A trout that has some resemblance to a salmon.

There is in many rivers that relate to the sea salmontrouts as much different from others, in shape and spots, as sheep differ in their shape and bigness. Walton.

SALPICON. n. f. [In cookery.] A kind of farce put into holes cut in legs of beef, veal, or mutton. Bailey.

SALSAMENTARIOUS. adj. [salsamentarius, Lat.] Belonging to salt things. DiB.

SALSIFY. n. f. [Latin.] A plant.

Salsify, or the common sort of goatbeard, is of a very long oval figure, as if it were cuds all over streaked, and engraven in the spaces between the streaks, which are sharp-pointed towards the end. Mortimer.

SALSOACID. adj. [salsus and acidus, Lat.] Having a taste compounded of saltiness and sourness.

The salsoacids help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.

SALSUGINOUS. adj. [salsugo, Lat.] Salty; somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or salsuginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alcalizate, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT. n. f. [salt, Gothick; realt, Sax. sal, Lat. sel, Fr.]

S A I

When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air. Shakspeare.

To SAIL. v. a.

1. To pass by means of sails.
A thousand ships were mann'd to sail the sea. Dryden.

View Aleinous' groves, from whence Sailing the spaces of the boundless deep,
To Ariconium precious fruits arriv'd. Philips.

2. To fly through.
Sublime the sails
Th' aerial space, and mounts the winged gales. Pope.

SA'ILER. } n. s. [sailor is more usual, sailer
SA'ILOR. } more analogical; from sail.]
A seaman; one who practises or understands navigation.
They had many times men of other countries that were no sailors. Bacon.

Batter'd by his lee they lay;
The passing winds through their torn canvass play,
And flagging sails on heartless sailors fall. Dryden.

Young Pompey built a fleet of large ships, and had good sailors, commanded by experienced captains. Arbutnot.

Full in the openings of the spacious main
It rides, and, lo! descends the sailer train. Pope.

SAILYA'RD. n. s. [sail and yard.] The pole on which the sail is extended.
With glance so swift the subtle lightning past,
As split the sailyards. Dryden.

SAIM. n. s. [saime, Italian.] Lard. It still denotes this in the northern counties, and in Scotland: as, swine's saim.

SAIN. [a participle, obsolete, from say.]
Said.
Some obscure precedence, that hath tofore been sain. Shakspeare.

SA'INFOIN. n. s. [sainfoin, Fr. medica.]
A kind of herb.

SAINT. n. s. [saint, Fr. sanctus, Lat.] A person eminent for piety and virtue.
To thee be worship and thy saints for aye. Shaks.
She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor ope her lap to saint seducing gold. Shakspeare.

Then thus I cloath my naked villany
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ,
And seem a saint when most I play the devil. Shaks.

Miracles are required of all who aspire to this dignity, because they say an hypocrite may imitate a saint in all other particulars. Addison.

By thy example kings are taught to sway,
Heroes to fight, and saints may learn to pray. Gran.

So unaffected, so compos'd a mind;
So firm, yet soft, so strong, yet so refin'd,
Heav'n, as its purest gold, by tortures try'd;
The saint sustain'd it, but the woman dy'd. Pope.

To SAINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To number among saints; to reckon among
saints by a publick decree: to canonize.
Are not the principles of those wretches still owned, and their persons sainted, by a race of men of the same stamp. South.

Over-against the church stands a large hospital,
erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified,
though never sainted. Addison.

Thy place is here, sad sister; come away:
Once, like thyself, I trembled, wept, and pray'd;
Love's victim then, though now a sainted maid. Pope.

To SAINT. v. n. To act with a show of piety.

SA'INTED. adj. [from saint.]

1. Holy; pious; virtuous.
Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspeare.

2. Holy; sacred.
I hold you as a thing enskied and sainted,
By your renouncement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity
As with a saint. Shakspeare.

The crown virtue gives,
After this mortal change, to her true servants,
Amongst the enthron'd gods on sainted hills. Milt.

SAINT John's Wort. n. s. [hypericum.] A plant.

SA'INTLIKE. adj. [saint and like.]

1. Suiting a faint; becoming a faint.
If still thou do'st retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saintlike show,
Still thou art bound to vice. Dryden.

2. Resembling a faint.
The king, in whose time it pass'd, whom catholicks count a saintlike and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

SA'INTLY. adj. [from saint.] Like a faint;
becoming a faint.
I mention still
Him whom thy wrongs, with faintly patience borne,
Made famous in a land and times obscure. Milton.

SA'INTSHIP. n. s. [from saint.] The character or qualities of a faint.
He that thinks his saintship licenses him to censures, is to be looked on not only as a rebel, but an usurper. Decay of Piety.

This favours something ranker than the tenets of
the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded upon saintship. South.

The devil was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him. Pope.

SAKE. n. s. [rac, Sax. faecke, Dutch.]

1. Final cause; end; purpose.
Thou neither do'st persuade me to seek wealth
For empire's sake, nor empire to affect
For glory's sake. Milton.

The prophane person serves the devil for nought,
and sins only for sin's sake. Tillotson.

Wyndham like a tyrant throws the dart,
And takes a cruel pleasure in the smart;
Proud of the ravage that her beauties make,
Delights in wounds, and kills for killing's sake. Granville.

2. Account; regard to any person or thing.
Would I were young for your sake, mistress Anne!
Shakspeare.

The general so likes your musick, that he desires you, for love's sake, to make no more noise with it.
Shakspeare.

SA'KER. n. s. [Saker originally signifies a hawk, the pieces of artillery being often denominated from birds of prey.]
The cannon, blunderbuss, and saker,
He was th' inventor of, and maker. Hudibras.

According to observations made with one of her majesty's sakers, and a very accurate pendulum
chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies
five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds,
which is a mile in a little above seventeen half
seconds. Derham.

SA'KERET. n. s. [from saker.] The male of a faker-hawk.
This kind of hawk is esteemed next after the falcon and gyr-falcon. Bailey.

SAL. n. s. [Latin.] Salt. A word often
used in pharmacy.
Salsoacids will help its passing off; as sal prunel.
Floyer.

Sal gem is so called from its breaking frequently into gem-like squares. It differs not in property from the common salt of the salt springs, or that of the sea, when all are equally pure. Woodward.

Sal Ammoniack is found still in Ammonia, as mentioned by the ancients, and from whence it had
its name. Woodward.

SALA'CIOUS. adj. [salacis, Lat. salace,
Fr.] Lustful; lecherous.
One more salacious, rich, and old,
Out-bids, and buys her. Dryden.

Feed him with herbs
Of generous warmth, and of salacious kind. Dryd.

Animals spleen'd, grow extremely salacious. Arbutnot.

SALA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from salacious.]
Lecherously; lustfully.

SALA'CITY. n. s. [salacitas, Latin: from
salacious.] Lust; lechery.
Immoderate salacity and excess of venery is supposed to shorten the lives of cocks. Brown.

A corrosive acrimony in the seminal lymph produces salacity. Floyer.

SA'LAD. n. s. [salade, Fr. salaet, German.] Food of raw herbs. It has been always pronounced familiarly fallet.
I climbed into this garden to pick a salad, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach. Shakspeare.

My fallet days,
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood. Shakspeare.

You have, to rectify your palate,
An olive, capers, or some better salad,
Ush'ring the mutton. Ben Jonson.

Some coarse cold salad is before thee set;
Fall on. Dryden.

The happy old Coricyan's fruits and salads, on which he lived contented, were all of his own
growth. Dryden.

Leaves, eaten raw, are termed salad: if boiled,
they become potherbs; and some of those plants
which are potherbs in one family, are salad in another. Watts.

SALAMA'NDER. n. s. [salamandre, Fr.
salamandra, Latin.] An animal supposed
to live in the fire, and imagined to be very poisonous. Ambrose Parey has a picture of the salamander, with a receipt
for her bite; but there is no such creature, the name being now given to a poor
harmless insect.

The salamander liveth in the fire, and hath force
also to extinguish it. Bacon.

According to this hypothesis, the whole lunar
world is a torrid zone, and may be supposed uninhabitable, except they are salamanders which dwell
therein. Glanville.

Whereas it is commonly said that a salamander
extinguisheth fire, we have found by experience, that
on hot coals it dieth immediately. Brown.

The artist was so encompassed with fire and smoke,
that one would have thought nothing but a salamander could have been safe in such a situation. Addison.

SALAMA'NDER'S Hair. } n. s. A kind of SALAMA'NDER'S Wool. } asbestos, or mineral flax.

There may be such candles as are made of salamander's wool, being a kind of mineral, which whiteneth in the burning, and consumeth not. Bacon.

Of English talc; the coarser sort is called plaister or parget: the finer, spaad, earth flax, or salamander's
hair. Woodward.

SALAMA'NDRINE. adj. [from salamander.]
Resembling a salamander.
Laying it into a pan of burning coals, we observed
a certain salamandrine quality, that made it capable
of living in the midst of fire, without being consumed
or singed. Speclator.

SA'LARY. n. s. [salaire, Fr. salarium,
Latin.]

1. Salarium, or salary, is derived from sal.
Arbutnot.

2. Stated hire; annual or periodical payment.
This is hire and salary, not revenge. Shakspeare.

Several persons, out of a salary of five hundred pounds, have always lived at the rate of two thousand. Swift.

SALE. n. s. [saal, Dutch.]

1. The act of selling.

2. Vent; power of selling; market.
Nothing doth more enrich any country than many towns; for the countrymen will be more industrious in tillage, and rearing of all husbandry
commodities, knowing that they shall have ready
sale for them at those towns. Spenser.

3. A publick and proclaimed exposition of goods to the market; auction.
Those that won the plate, and those thus sold,
ought to be marked so as they may never return to the rate, or to the sale. Temp. c.

4. State of being venal; price.

The other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods. Shakspeare.

Others more moderate seeming, but their aim Private reward; for which both God and State They'd set to sale. Milton.

The more money a man spends, the more must he endeavour to increase his stock; which at last sets the liberty of a commonwealth to sale. Addison.

5. It seems in Spenser to signify a wicker basket; perhaps from fallow, in which fishes are caught.

To make baskets of bulrushes was my wont;
Who to entrap the fish in winding sale
Was better seen? Spenser.

SA'LEABLE. adj. [from sale.] Vendible; fit for sale; marketable.

I can impute this general enlargement of saleable things to no cause sooner than the Cornishman's want of vent and money. Carew.

This vent is made quicker or slower, as greater or less quantities of any saleable commodity are removed out of the course of trade. Locke.

SA'LEABLENESS. n. f. [from saleable.] The state of being saleable.

SA'LEABLY. adv. [from saleably.] In a saleable manner.

SA'LEBROUS. adj. [salebrosus, Latin.] Rough; uneven; rugged.

SA'LESMAN. n. f. [sale and man.] One who sells clothes ready made.

Poets make characters, as salesmen cloaths;
We take no measure of your fops and beaux. Swift.

SA'LEWORK. n. f. [sale and work.] Work for sale; work carelessly done.

I see no more in you than in the ordinary
Of Nature's salework. Shakspeare.

SALIENT. adj. [French.] In heraldry, denotes a lion in a leaping posture, and standing so that his right foot is in the dexter point, and his hinder left foot in the sinister base point of the escutcheon, by which it is distinguished from rampant.

Salient, in heraldry, is when the lion is sporting himself. Peacham.

SALIENT. adj. [salient, Latin.]

1. Leaping; bounding; moving by leaps.

The legs of both sides moving together, as frogs, and salient animals, is properly called leaping. Brown.

2. Beating; panting.

A salient point so first is call'd the heart,
By turns dilated, and by turns compress'd,
Expels and entertains the purple guest. Blackmore.

3. Springing or shooting with a quick motion.

Who best can send on high
The salient spout, far streaming to the sky. Pope.

SALIGOT. n. f. [tribulus aquaticus.] Water-thistle.

SALINE. adj. [salinus, Latin.] Con-
SALINOUS. adj. [sisting of salt; constituting salt.]

We do not easily ascribe their induration to cold; but rather unto salinous spirits and concretionary juices. Brown.

This saline sap of the vessels, by being refused reception of the parts, declares itself in a more hostile manner, by drying the radical moisture. Harvey.

If a very small quantity of any salt or vitriol be dissolved in a great quantity of water, the particles of the salt or vitriol will not sink to the bottom, though they be heavier in specie than the water, but will evenly diffuse themselves into all the water, so as to make it as saline at the top as at the bottom. Newton's Opticks.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbutnot.

SALIVA. n. f. [Latin.] Every thing that is spit up; but it more strictly signifies that juice which is separated by the glands called salival. Quincy.

Not meeting with disturbance from the saliva, I the sooner extirpated them. Wifeman.

SALIVAL. adj. [from saliva.] Relating SALIVARY. adj. to spittle.

The woodpecker, and other birds that prey upon flies, which they catch with their tongue, in the room of the said glands have a couple of bags filled with a viscid humour, which, by small canals, like the salival, being brought into their mouths, they dip their tongues herein, and so with the help of this natural birdlime attack the prey. Grew.

The necessity of spittle to dissolve the aliment appears from the contrivance of nature in making the salivary ducts of animals which ruminate, extremely open: such animals as swallow their aliment without chewing, want salivary glands. Arbutnot.

TO SALIVATE. v. a. [from saliva, Latin.]
TO PURGE by the salival glands.

She was prepossessed with the scandal of salivating, and went out of town. Wifeman.

SALIVATION. n. f. [from salivate.] A method of cure much practised of late in venereal, scrophulous, and other obstinate cases, by promoting a secretion of spittle. Quincy.

Holding of ill-tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

SALIVOUS. adj. [from saliva.] Consisting of spittle; having the nature of spittle.

There happeneth an elongation of the uvula, through the abundance of salivous humour flowing upon it. Wifeman.

SALLET. n. f. [corrupted by pro-
SALLETING. n. f. nunciation from salad.]

I tried upon sallet oil. Boyle.

Sow some early salleting. Mortimer.

SALLIANCE. n. f. [from fally.] The act of issuing forth; fally. Not inelegant, but out of use.

Now note I weet,
Sir Guyon, why with so fierce salliance
And fell intent, ye did at earst me meet. F. Queen.

SALLOW. n. f. [salix, Lat.] A tree of the genus of willow.

Sallows and reeds on banks of rivers born,
Remain to cut to stay thy vines. Dryden.

SALLOW. adj. [sal, German, black; sale, French, foul.] Sickly; yellow.

What a deal of brine
Hath wash't thy fallow cheeks for Rosaline? Shakspeare.

The scene of beauty and delight is chang'd:
No roses bloom upon my fading cheek,
Nor laughing graces wanton in my eyes;
But haggard Grief, lean looking fallow Care,
And pining Discontent, a rueful train,
Dwell on my brow, all hideous and forlorn. Rowe.

SALLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Yellowness; sickly paleness.

A fish diet would give such a fallowness to the celebrated beauties of this island, as would scarce make them distinguishable from those of France. Addison.

SALLY. n. f. [fallie, French.]

1. Eruption; issue from a place besieged; quick egress.

The deputy sat down before the town for the space of three winter months; during which time fallies were made by the Spaniards, but they were beaten in with loss. Bacon.

2. Range; excursion.

Everyone shall know a country better, that makes often fallies into it, and traverses it up and down, than he that, like a mill-horse, goes still round in the same track. Locke.

3. Flight; volatile or sprightly exertion.

These passages were intended for fallies of wit; but whence comes all this rage of wit? Stillingfleet.

4. Escape; levity; extravagant flight; frolick; wild gayety; exorbitance.

At his return all was clear, and this excursion was esteemed but a fally of youth. Wotton.

'Tis but a fally of youth. Denham.

We have written some things which we may with never to have thought on: some fallies of levity ought to be imputed to youth. Swift.

The episodical part, made up of the extravagant fallies of the prince of Wales and Falstaff's humour, is of his own invention. Shakspeare Illustrated.

TO SALLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To make an eruption; to issue out.

The Turks fallying forth, received thereby great hurt. Knolles.

The noise of some tumultuous fight;
They break the truce, and fally out by night. Dryden.

The summons take of the same wumpets call,
To fally from one port, or man one public wall. Tate.

SALLYPORT. n. f. [fally and port.] Gate at which fallies are made.

My slippery soul had quit the fort,
But that she stopp'd the fallyport. Cleveland.

Love to our citadel resorts
Through those deceitful fallyports,
Our sentinels betray our forts. Denham.

SALMAGUNDI. n. f. [It is said to be corrupted from selon mon gout, or salé à mon goût.] A mixture of chopped meat and pickled herrings with oil, vinegar, pepper, and onions.

SALMON. n. f. [salmo, Lat. saumon, Fr.] A fish.

SALSAMENTARIOUS. adj. [salsamentarius, Lat.] Belonging to salt things. Diét.

SALSIFY. n. f. [Latin.] A plant.

Salsify, or the common sort of goatbeard, is of a very long oval figure, as if it were cuds all over streaked, and engraven in the spaces between the streaks, which are sharp-pointed towards the end. Mortimer.

SALSOACID. adj. [salsus and acidus, Lat.]

Having a taste compounded of saltiness and sourness.

The salsoacids help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.

SALSUGINOUS. adj. [salsugo, Lat.] Salty; somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or salsuginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alcalizate, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT. n. f. [salt, Gothick; realt, Sax. sal, Lat. sel, Fr.]

1. Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be, dissolubility in water, and a pungent sapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential; fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water: after this the solution is filtrated, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious salt. Volatile salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some putrified parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization. Harris.

Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man? Shakspeare.

He perfidiously has given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,
To his wife and mother. Shakspeare.

Aromatize it with sanders. Wifeman.

SANDEVER. n. f.

That which our English glassmen call sandever, and the French, of whom probably the name was borrowed, suinderer, is that increment that is made when the materials of glass, namely, sand and a fixt lixiviate alkali, having been first baked together, and kept long in fusion, the mixture casts up the superfluous salt, which the workmen afterwards take off with tadders, and lay by as little worth. Boyle.

SANDISH. adj. [from sand.] Approaching to the nature of sand; loose; not close; not compact.

Plant the tenuifolia's and ranunculus's in fresh sandy earth, taken from under the turf. Evelyn.
SA'NDSTONE. n. f. [sand and stone.] Stone of a loose and friable kind, that easily crumbles into sand.

Grains of gold in sandstone, from the mine of Costa Rica, which is not reckoned rich; but every hundred weight yields about an ounce of gold. Woodward.

SA'NDY. adj. [from sand.]

1. Abounding with sand; full of sand.

I should not see the sandy hourglass run,
 But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakspeare.

Safer shall he be on the sandy plains,
 Than where castles mounted stand. Shakspeare.

A region so desert, dry, and sandy, that travellers are fain to carry water on their camels. Brown.

Rough unwieldy earth, nor to the plough
 Nor to the cattle kind, with sandy stones
 And gravel o'er-bounding. Philips.
 O'er sandy wilds were yellow harvests spread. Pope.

2. Consisting of sand; unsolid.

Favour, so bottomed upon the sandy foundation of personal respects only, cannot be long lived. Bacon.

SANE. adj. [santus, Lat.] Sound; healthy.
Bz ynard wrote a poem on preserving the body in a sane and sound state.

SANG. The preterit of sing.

Then sang Moses and Israel this song unto the Lord. Exodus.

Thence next they sang, of all creation first. Milton.

SANGUIFEROUS. adj. [sanguifer, Latin.] Conveying blood.

The fifth conjugation of the nerves is branched to the muscles of the face, particularly the cheeks, whose sanguiferous vessels it twists about. Derham.

SANGUIFICATION. n. f. [sanguification, Fr. sanguis and facio, Latin.] The production of blood; the conversion of the chyle into blood.

Since the lungs are the chief instrument of sanguification, the animal that has that organ faulty can never have the vital juices derived from the blood, in a good state. Arbuthnot.

Asthmatick persons have voracious appetites, and consequently, for want of a right sanguification, are leucophlegmatick. Arbuthnot.

SA'NGUIFIER. n. f. [sanguis and facio, Latin.] Producer of blood.

Bitters, like choler, are the best sanguifiers, and also the best febrifuges. Floyer.

To SA'NGUIFY. v. n. [sanguis and facio, Latin.] To produce blood.

At the same time I think, I command: in inferior faculties, I walk, see, hear, digest, sanguify, and carnify, by the power of an individual soul. Hale.

SA'NGUINARY. adj. [sanguinarius, Latin; sanguinaire, Fr. from sanguis, Latin.] Cruel; bloody; murderous.

We may not propagate religion by wars, or by sanguinary persecutions to force consciences. Bacon.

The scene is now more sanguinary, and fuller of actors: never was such a confused mysterious civil war as this. Howel.

Passion transforms us into a kind of savages, and makes us brutal and sanguinary. Broom.

SA'NGUINARY. n. f. [sanguis, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SA'NGUINE. adj. [sanguin, Fr. sanguineus, from sanguis, Latin.]

1. Red; having the colour of blood.

This fellow
 Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
 Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves
 Did represent my master's blushing cheeks. Shakspeare.

A stream of nest'rous humour issuing flow'd Sanguine. Milton.

Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward,
 Girt in her sanguine gown. Dryden.

Her flag aloft, spread rustling to the wind,
 And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire;
 The weaver, charm'd with what his loom design'd,

Goes on to sea, and knows not to retire. Dryden.
 2. Abounding with blood more than any other humour; cheerful.

The cholerick fell short of the longevity of the sanguine. Brown.

Though these faults differ in their complexions as sanguine from melancholy, yet they are frequently united. Government of the Tongue.

3. Warm; ardent; confident.

A set of sanguine tempers ridicule, in the number of fopperies, all such apprehensions. Swift.

SA'NGUINE. n. f. [from sanguis.] Blood colour.

A grievous wound,
 From which forth gush'd a stream of gore, blood thick,

That all her goodly garments stain'd around,
 And in deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Fairy Queen.

SA'NGUINESS. } n. f. [from sanguine.]
SANGUINITY. } Ardour, heat of expectation; confidence. Sanguinity is perhaps only used by Swift.

Rage, or phrensy it may be, in some perhaps natural courage, or *sanguine*ness of temper in others; but true valour it is not, if it knows not as well to suffer as to do. That mind is truly great, and only that, which stands above the power of all intrinsic violence; which keeps itself a distinct principality, independent upon the outward man. Decay of Piety.
 I very much distrust your sanguinity. Swift.

SANGUINEOUS. adj. [sanguineus, Latin; sanguin, French.]

1. Constituting blood.

This animal of Plato containeth not only sanguineous and repairable particles, but is made up of veins, nerves, and arteries. Brown.

2. Abounding with blood.

A plethorick constitution, in which true blood abounds, is called sanguineous. Arbuthnot.

SA'NHEDRIM. n. f. [synedrium, Lat.] The chief council among the Jews, consisting of seventy elders, over whom the high priest presided.

SA'NICLE. n. f. [sanicle, Fr. sanicula, Lat.] A plant.

SA'NIES. n. f. [Lat.] Thin matter; serous excretion.

It began with a round crack in the skin, without other matter than a little sanies. Wifeman.

SA'NIUS. adj. [from sanies.] Running a thin serous matter, not a well-digested pus.

Observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion as the only way to remove the pain. Wifeman.

SA'NITY. n. f. [sanitas, Latin.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are
 A happiness that often madness hits on,
 Which sanity and reason could not be
 So prosperously delivered of. Shakspeare.

SANK. The preterit of sink.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground. Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon.

SANS. prep. [French.] Without. Out of use.

Last scene of all,
 That ends this strange eventful history,
 Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
 Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing. Shakspeare.

For nature so preposterously to err,
 Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
 Sans witchcraft could not. Shakspeare.

SAP. n. f. [sape, Saxon; sap, Dutch.]

The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.

Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweet,
 Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie,
 Now in the same bathing his tender feet. Spenser.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
 In sap consuming winter's drizzled snow,
 And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
 Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakspeare.

Wound the bark of our fruit-trees,
 Left, being over-proud with sap and blood,
 With too much riches it confound itself. Shakspeare.

His presence had infus'd
 Into the plant scintillating sap. Milton.

The sap which at the root is bred
 In trees, through all the boughs is spread. Waller.

Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot.

To SAP. v. a. [sapper, Fr. sappare, Ital.]

To undermine; to subvert by digging; to mine.

Their dwellings were sapp'd by floods,
 Their houses fell upon their household gods. Dryden.

To SAP. v. n. To proceed by mine; to proceed invisibly.

For the better security of the troops, both assaults are carried on by sapping. Taller.

In vain my heroes fight, and patriots rave,
 If secret gold saps on from knave to knave. Pope.

SA'PPHIRE. n. f. [sapphirus, Latin; so that it is improperly written sapphire.]

A precious stone of a blue colour.

Sapphire is of a bright blue colour. Woodward.

In enroll'd tufts, flow'rs purpled, blue and white,
 Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery. Shakspeare.

He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
 And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.

That the sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous, and many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their virtue is equivalent to their value. Derham.

SA'PPHIRINE. adj. [sapphirinus, Latin.]

Made of sapphire; resembling sapphire.

She was too sapphirine and clear for thee;
 Clay, flint, and jet now thy fit dwellings be. Donna.

A few grains of shell silver, with a convenient proportion of powdered crystal glass, having been kept three hours in fusion, I found the coagulated mass, upon breaking the crucible, of a lovely sapphirine blue. Boyle.

SA'PID. adj. [sapidus, Latin.] Tasteful; palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.

Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet. Brown.

The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction, till they are disentangled from the salts; for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, sapid, odorous, viscid, inflammable, frothy water will constantly be found floating a-top of the boiling liquor. Arbuthnot.

SAPIDITY. } n. f. [from sapid.] Taste-SAPIDNESS. } fulness; power of stimulating the palate.

As for their taste, if their nutriment be airy neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is ingustible, and void of all sapidity. Brown.

If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals, it will scarce be discriminated from their phlegm. Boyle.

SA'PIENCE. n. f. [sapience, Fr. sapientia, Lat.] Wisdom; sageness; knowledge.

By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom. Greus.

Not only they that dwell in lowly dust,
 The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
 But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom unjust,
 Didst to the top of honour earth advance:

They now, puffed up with's deignful insolence,
Despise the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth. Wotton.

Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience. Raleigh.

Sapience and love
Immense, and all his father in him shone.
Milton.

O sov'reign, virtuous, precious of all trees
In paradise! of operation blest
To sapience. Milton.

Many a wretch in Bedlam,
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about,
Still has gratitude and sapience,
To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

SAPIENT. adj. [sapiens, Lat.] Wise;
sage.

There the sapient king held dalliance. Milton.

SAPLESS. adj. [saploos, Dutch.]

1. Wanting sap; wanting vital juice.

Pahless arms, like to a wither'd vine,
That droops his sapless branches to the ground.

Shakspeare.

The tree of knowledge, blasted by disputes,
Produces sapless leaves instead of fruits. Denham.

This single stick was full of sap; but now in vain does art tie that withered bundle of twigs to its sap- less trunk. Swift.

2. Dry; old; husky.

If by this bribe, well plac'd, he would ensare
Some sapless usurer that wants an heir. Dryden.

SAPLING. n. f. [from sap.] A young tree; a young plant.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakspeare.

Nurse the saplings tall, and curl the grove
With ringlets quaint. Milton.

A sapling pine he wrench'd from out the ground.
The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.

What planter will attempt to yoke
A sapling with a falling oak? Swift.

Slouch turn'd his head, saw his wife's vig'rous hand

Wielding her oaken sapling of command. King.

SAPONACEOUS. adj. [from sapo, Latin,

SAPONARY. adj. soap.] Sopy; resembling soap; having the qualities of soap.

By digesting a solution of salt of tartar with oil of almonds, I could reduce them to a soft saponary substance. Boyle.

Any mixture of an oily substance with salt, may be called a soap: bodies of this nature are called saponaceous. Arbutnot.

SAPOR. n. f. [Lat.] Taste; power of affecting or stimulating the palate.

There is some sapor in all aliments, as being to be distinguished and judged by the gust, which cannot be admitted in air. Brown.

The shape of those little particles of matter which distinguish the various sapors, odours, and colours of bodies. Watts.

SAPORIFICK. adj. [saporifique, Fr. sapor and facio, Lat.] Having the power to produce tastes.

SAPPINESS. n. f. [from sappy.] The state or the quality of abounding in sap;

fucculence; juiciness.

SAPPY. adj. [from sap.]

1. Abounding in sap; juicy; fucculent.

The sappy parts, and next resembling juice,
Were turn'd to moisture for the body's use,
Supplying humours, blood, and nourishment.

Dryden.

The sappy boughs

Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiments
Of future harvest. Philips.

The green heat the ripe, and the ripe give fire to the green; to which the bigness of their leaves, and hardness of their stalks, which continue moist and sappy long, doth much contribute. Mortimer.

2. Young; not firm; weak.

This young prince was brought up among nurses, till he arrived to the age of six years: when he had passed this weak and sappy age, he was committed to Dr. Cox. Hayward.

SARABAND. n. f. [sarabande, Spanish;

sarabande, Fr.] A Spanish dance.

The several modifications of this tune-playing quality in a fiddle, to play preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are as much real qualities in the instrument as the thought is in the mind of the composer.

Arbutnot.

SARCASM. n. f. [sarcasme, Fr. sarcas- mus, Lat.] A keen reproach; a taunt;

a gibe.

Sarcasms of wit are transmitted in story.

Government of the Tongue.

Rejoice, O young man, says Solomon, in a severe sarcasm, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart; but know that for these things
God will bring thee into judgment. Rogers.

When an angry master says to his servant, It is bravely done, it is one way of giving a severe reproach; for the words are spoken by way of sarcasm, or irony. Watts.

SARCASTICAL. adj. [from sarcasm.]

SARCASTICK. adj. Keen; taunting; severe.

What a fierce and sarcastick reprehension would this have drawn from the friendship of the world, and yet what a gentle one did it receive from Christ?

South.

SARCASTICALLY. adv. [from sarcastical.]

Tauntingly; severely.

He asked a lady playing with a lap-dog, whether the women of that country used to have any children or no? thereby sarcastically reproaching them for misplacing that affection upon brutes, which could only become a mother to her child. South.

SARCENET. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be sericum saracenicum, Lat.] Fine thin woven silk.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleigh'd silk, thou green sarcenet flap for a fore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse?

Shakspeare.

If they be covered, though but with linen or sar- cenet, it intercepts the effluvia. Brown.

These are they that cannot bear the heat
Of figur'd silks, and under sarcenets sweat. Dryden.

She darts from sarcenet ambush wily leers,
Twitches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
Her fan will pat the cheek; these snares disdain.

Gay.

To SARCLE. v. a. [sarcler, Fr. sarculo,

Lat.] To weed corn. Ainsworth.

SARCOCE'LE. n. f. [σαρκὴ and κύλη; sarco- cele, Fr.] A fleshy excrescence of the testicles, which sometimes grows so large as to stretch the scrotum much beyond its natural size. Quincy.

SARCO'MA. n. f. [σάρκωμα.] A fleshy excrescence, or lump, growing in any part of the body, especially the nostrils.

Bailey.

SARCO'PHAGOUS. adj. [σάργη and φάγω.]

Flesh-eating; feeding on flesh.

SARCO'PHAGY. n. f. [σάργη and φάγω.]

The practice of eating flesh.

There was no sarcophagy before the flood; and,
without the eating of flesh, our fathers preserved themselves unto longer lives than their posterity.

Brown.

SARCO'TICK. n. f. [from σαρκὴ; sarcotique,

Fr.] A medicine which fills up ulcers with new flesh; an incarnative.

The humour was moderately repressed, and breathed forth; after which the ulcer incarnated with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it were cured by ointment of tuty. Wifeman.

SARCULATION. n. f. [sarculus, Latin.]

The act of weeding; plucking up weeds.

Diff.

SARDEL. n. f. A sort of precious stone. Stone.

SARDINE. n. f. He that sat was to look upon, like a jasper and a sardine stone. Revelations.

Thou shalt set in it four rows of stone, the first row shall be a sardius. Exodus.

SARDONYX. n. f. A precious stone.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind:

'tis of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx. Woodward.

SARK. n. f. [scynk, Sax.]

1. A shark or shirk.

2. In Scotland it denotes a shirt.

Flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open, and their sarks over their waistcoats. Arbutnot.

SARN. n. f. A British word for pavement, or stepping stones, still used in the same sense in Berkshire and Hampshire.

SARPLIER. n. f. [sarpilliere, Fr.] A piece of canvas for wrapping up wares; a packing-cloth. Bailey.

SARRASINE. n. f. [In botany.] A kind of birthwort. Bailey.

SARSA. n. f. Both a tree and SARSAPARE'LLA. n. f. an herb. Ainsworth.

SARSE. n. f. [perhaps because made of sar- cenet.] A sort of fine lawn sieve. Bailey.

To SARSE. v. a. [sasser, Fr.] To sift through a sarse or searse. Bailey.

SART. n. f. [In agriculture.] A piece of woodland turned into arable. Bailey.

SASH. n. f. [Of this word the etymologists give no account: I suppose it comes from scache, of scavoir, to know, a sash worn being a mark of distinction;

and a sash window being made particularly for the sake of seeing and being seen.]

1. A belt worn by way of distinction; a filken band worn by officers in the army.

2. A window so formed as to be let up and down by pullies.

She ventures now to lift the sash;

The window is her proper sphere. Swift.

She broke a pane in the sash window that looked into the yard. Swift.

SASHOON. n. f. A kind of leather stuffing put into a boot for the wearer's ease.

Ainsworth.

SA'SSAFRAS. n. f. A tree. The wood is medicinal.

SAT. The preterit of sit.

The picture of fair Venus, that

For which, men say, the goddess sat,

Was lost, 'till Lely from your look

Again that glorious image took. Waller.

I answered not the rehearsal, because I knew the author sat to himself when he drew the picture, and was the very bays of his own farce. Dryden.

SATA'NICAL. adj. [from Satan, the SATA'NICK. adj. prince of hell.] Devilish; infernal.

The faint satanick host,

Defensive scarce. Milton.

SATCHEL. n. f. [seckel, German; saccu- lus, Lat. Perhaps better sachel.] A little bag; commonly a bag used by schoolboys.

The whining schoolboy with his satchel,

And shining morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school. Shakspeare.
Schoolboys lag with satchels in their hands. Swift.

To SATIATE. v. a. [satio, Lat.] To satiate; to glut; to pall; to feed beyond natural desires.

Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me. Milton.

How will their bodies stript
Enrich the victors, while the vultures sate
Their maws with full repast? Philips.

Thy useless strength, mistaken king, employ,
Sated with rage, and ignorant of joy. Prior.

SATELLITE. n. f. [satelles, Lat. satellite, Fr.] This word is commonly pronounced in prose with the e mute in the plural, as in the singular, and is therefore only of three syllables; but Pope has in the plural continued the Latin form, and assigned it four; I think, improperly.] A small planet revolving round a larger.

Four moons move about Jupiter, and five about Saturn, called their satellites. Locke.

The smallest planets are situated nearest the sun and each other; whereas Jupiter and Saturn, that are vastly greater, and have many satellites about them, are wisely removed to the extreme regions of the system. Bentley.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove? Pope.

SATELLITIOUS. adj. [from satelles, Lat.]
Consisting of satellites.

Their solidity and opacity, and their satellitious attendance, their revolutions about the sun, and their rotations about their axis, are exactly the same. Cheyne.

To SATIATE, v. a. [satio, Lat.]

1. To satisfy; to fill.

Those smells are the most grateful where the degree of heat is small, or the strength of the smell allayed; for these rather woo the sense than sati- ate it. Bacon.

Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain; and men in trade seldom think of laying out their money upon land, 'till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ. Locke.

The loosen'd winds
Hurl'd high above the clouds; till all their force
Consum'd, her ray'nous jaws th' earth satiated clos'd. Philips.

2. To glut; to pall; to fill beyond natural desire.

Whatever novelty presents, children are presently eager to have a taste, and are as soon satiated with it. Locke.

He may be satiated, but not satisfy'd. Norris.

3. To gratify desire.

I may yet survive the malice of my enemies,
although they should be satiated with my blood. King Charles.

4. To saturate; to impregnate with as much as can be contained or imbibed.

Why does not salt of tartar draw more water out of the air, than in a certain proportion to its quantity, but for want of an attractive force after it is satiated with water? Newton.

SATIATE. adj. [from the verb.] Glutted; full to satiety. When it has with, it seems a participle; when of, an adjective.

Our generals, retir'd to their estates,
In life's cool evening, satiate of applause,
Nor think of bleeding ev'n in Brunswick's cause. Pope.

Now may'rs and shrieves all hush'd and satiate
lay,
Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope.

SATIETY. n. f. [satietas, Lat. satiété, Fr.]
Fulness beyond desire or pleasure; more than enough; wearisomness of plenty;
state of being palled or glutted.

He leaves a shallow plash to plunge him in the deep,
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst. Shakspeare.

Nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waining-time and suspect of satiety. Wotton.

In all pleasures there is satiety; and after they be used, their verdure departeth. Hakewill.

They satiate and soon fill,
Though pleasant; but thy words, with grace divine Imbu'd, bring to their sweetness no satiety. Milton.

No action, the usefulness of which has made it the matter of duty, but a man may bear the continual pursuit of, without loathing or satiety. South.

The joy unequal'd, if its end it gain,
Without satiety, though e'er so blest,
And but more relish'd as the more distress'd. Pope.

SATIN. n. f. [satin, Fr. drapo di setan, Italian; sattin, Dutch.] A soft close and shining silk.

Upon her body she wore a doublet of sky-colour satin, covered with plates of gold, and as it were nailed with precious stones, that in it she might seem armed. Sidney.

The ladies dress'd in rich symars were seen,
Of Florence satin, flower'd with white and green,
And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin. Dryden.

Her petticoat, transform'd apace,
Became black satin flounc'd with lace. Swift.

Lay the child carefully in a case, covered with a mantle of blue satin. Arbutnot.

SATIRE. n. f. [satira, anciently satura,
Lat. not from satyrus, a satyr; satire, Fr.] A poem in which wickedness or folly is censured. Proper satire is distinguished, by the generality of the reflections, from a lampoon which is aimed against a particular person; but they are too frequently confounded: it has on before the subject.

He dares to sing thy praises in a clime
Where vice triumphs, and virtue is a crime;
Where ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satyr on the most of human kind. Dryden.

My verse is satire, Dorset lend your ear,
And patronise a muse you cannot fear. Young.

SATIRICAL. } adj. [satiricus, Lat. sati- SATIRICK. } rique, Fr. from satire.]

1. Belonging to satire; employed in writing of invective.

You must not think, that a satyrick style
Allows of scandalous and brutish words. Rescommon.
What human kind desires, and what they shun,
Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall this satirical collection fill. Dryden.

2. Censorious; severe in language.

Slanders, sir; for the satirical slave says here, that old men have grey beards; that their faces are wrinkled. Shakspeare.

He that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others memory. Bacon.

On me when dunces are satirick,
I take it for a panegyrick. Swift.

SATIRICALLY. adv. [from satirical.]
With invective; with intention to censure or vilify.

He applies them satirically to some customs, and kinds of philosophy, which he arraigns. Dryden.

SATIRIST. n. f. [from satire.] One who writes satires.

I first adventure, follow me who list,
And be the second English satirist. Hall.

Wycherly, in his writings, is the sharpest satyr of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions: in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, inoffensive. Granville.

All vain pretenders have been constantly the topicks of the most candid satyrists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon or Boileau. Cleland.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay:
Blest satyr! who touch'd the mean so true,
As show'd vice had his hate and pity too. Pope.
To SATIRIZE. v. a. [satirizer, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire.

Covetousness is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness. Dryden.

Should a writer single out and point his raillery at particular persons, or satirize the miserable, he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers; but must be a very ill man if he could please himself. Addison.

I insist that my lion's mouth be not defiled with scandal; for I would not make use of him to revile
the human species, and satirize his betters. Speater.

It is as hard to satirize well a man of distinguished vices, as to praise well a man of distinguished virtues. Swift.

SATISFACTION. n. f. [satisfactio, Latin;
satisfaction, Fr.]

1. The act of pleasing to the full, or state of being pleased.

Run over the circle of earthly pleasures, and had not God secured a man a solid pleasure from his own actions, he would be forced to complain that pleasure was not satisfaction. South.

2. The act of pleasing.

The mind, having a power to suspend the execution and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them. Locke.

3. The state of being pleased.

'Tis a wretched satisfaction, a revengeful man takes, even in losing his life, provided his enemy go for company. L'Estrange.

There are very few discourses so short, clear, and consistent, to which most men may not, with satis- faction enough to themselves, raise a doubt. Locke.

4. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness; conviction.

Wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?
—What satisfaction can you have? Shakspeare.

5. Gratification; that which pleases.

Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name,
Such toys as these have cheated into fame;
Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain. Dryden.

6. Amends; atonement for a crime; recompense for an injury.

Die he or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid satisfaction, death for death. Milton.

SATISFACTIVE. adj. [satisfactus, Latin.]
Giving satisfaction.

By a final and satisfactive discernment of faith, we lay the last effects upon the first cause of all things. Brown.

SATISFACTORILY. adv. [from satisfac- tory.] So as to content.

Bellonius hath been more satisfactorily experimental, not only affirming that chameleons feed on flies, but upon exenteration he found these animals in their bellies. Brown.

They strain their memory to answer him satis- factorily unto all his demands. Digby.

SATISFACTORINESS. n. f. [from satisfac- tory.] Power of satisfying; power of giving content.

The incompleatness of the seraphick lover's happiness in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but his want of an entire possession of them. Boyle.

SATISFACTORY. adj. [satisfactoire, Fr.
satisfactus, Lat.]

1. Giving satisfaction; giving content.

An intelligent American would scarce take it for a satisfactory account, if, desiring to learn our architecture, he should be told that a pillar was a thing supported by a basis. Locke.

2. Atoning; making amends.

A most wise and sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ. Sanderson.

5. To free from doubt, perplexity, or suspense.

Of many things useful and curious you may satisfy yourselves in Leonardi de Vinci. Dryden.

This I would willingly be satisfied in, whether the soul, when it thinks thus, separate from the body, acts less rationally than when conjointly with it? Locke.

6. To convince.

He declares himself satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause. Dryden.

When come to the utmost extremity of body, what can there put a stop and satisfy the mind that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it! Locke.

The standing evidences of the truth of the Gospel are in themselves most firm, solid, and satisfying.

To SA'TISFY. v. n.

1. To give content.

2. To feed to the full.

3. To make payment.

By the quantity of silver they give or take, they estimate the value of other things, and satisfy for them: thus silver becomes the measure of commerce. Locke.

SA'TURABLE. adj. [from saturate.] Impregnable with any thing till it will receive no more.

Be the figures of the salts never so various, yet if the atoms of water were fluid, they would always so conform to those figures as to fill up all vacuities; and consequently the water would be saturable with the same quantity of any salt, which it is not. Grew.

SA'TURANT. adj. [from saturans, Latin.]

Impregnating to the fill.

To SA'TURATE. v. a. [satur, Latin.]

Savoury meat, such as my father loveth. Genesis.
The savoury pulp they chew. Milton.

SAV'OY. n. f. [brassica sabaudica, Latin.]

A sort of colewort.

SA'USAGE. n. f. [saucisse, French; salsum, Latin.] A roll or ball made commonly of pork or veal, and sometimes of beef, minced very small, with salt and spice; sometimes it is stuffed into the guts of fowls, and sometimes only rolled in flower.

SAW. The preterit of see.

I never saw 'till now Sight more detestable. Milton.

SAW. n. f. [sawe, Danish; paga, or pige, Saxon; scie, French.]

1. A dentated instrument, by the attrition of which wood or metal is cut.

The teeth are filed to an angle, pointing towards the end of the saw, and not towards the handle of the saw, or straight between the handle and end; because the saw is designed to act only in its progress forwards, a man having in that more strength than he can have in drawing back his saw, and therefore when he draws it back, he bears it lightly off the unfawn stuff, which enables him the longer to continue his several progressions of the saw. Moxon.

The roach is a leather mouth'd fish, and has saw-like teeth in his throat. Walton.

'Then saws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryden.

If they cannot cut,
His saws are toothless, and his hatchets lead. Pope.

2. [paga, Saxon; saeghe, Dutch.] A saying; a maxim; a sentence; an axiom; a proverb.

Good king, that must approve the common saw:
Thou out of Heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun! Shakspere.

From the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all saws of books. Shakspere.

His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ. Shaksp.

Strict age and four severity,
With their grave saws in slumber lie. Milton.

To SAW. v. a. part. sawed and sawn.

[scier, French; from the noun.] To cut timber or other matter with a saw.

They were stoned, they were sawn asunder. Hebrews.

A carpenter after he hath sawn down a tree, and wrought it handsomely, sets it in a wall. Wisdom.

Matter workmen, when they direct any of their underlings to saw a piece of stuff, have several phrases for the sawing of it: they seldom say, saw the piece of stuff; but, draw the saw through it; give the piece of stuff a kerf. Moxon.

It is an incalcescency, from a swift motion, such as that of running, threshing, or sawing. Ray.

If I cut my finger, I shall as certainly feel pain as if my soul was co-extended with the limb, and had a piece of it sawn through. Collier.

S A Y

SA'WDUST. n. f. [saw and dust.] Dust made by the attrition of the saw.

If the membrane be fouled by the sawdust of the bone, wipe it off with a sponge. Wifeman.

Rotten sawdust, mixed with earth, enriches it very much. Mortimer.

SA'WFISH. n. f. [saw and fish.] A sort of fish with a kind of dentated horn.

SA'WPIT. n. f. [saw and pit.] Pit over which timber is laid to be fawn by two men.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once
With some diffused song Shakspere.

They colour it by laying it in a sawpit that hath oak saw-dust therein. Mortimer.

SAW-WORT. n. f. [serratula, Latin.] A plant like the greater centaury, from which this differs in having smaller heads, and from the knapweed, in having the borders of the leaves cut into small sharp segments, resembling the teeth of a saw. Miller.

SAW-WREST. n. f. [saw and wrest.] A sort of tool.

With the saw-wrest they set the teeth of the saw; that is, they put one of the notches of the wrest between the first two teeth on the blade of the saw, and then turn the handle horizontally a little about upon the notch towards the end of the saw; and that at once turns the first tooth somewhat towards you, and the second tooth from you. Moxon.

SA'WER. } n. f. [scieur, French; from

SA'WYER. } saw.] One whose trade is to saw timber into boards or beams.

The pit-saw is used by joiners, when what they have to do may be as soon done at home as send it to the sawyers. Moxon.

SA'XIFRAGE. n. f. [saxifrage, French; saxifraga, Latin.] A plant.

Saxifrage, quasi saxum frangere, to break the stone, is applicable to any thing having this property; but is a term most commonly given to a plant, from an opinion of its medicinal virtues to this effect. Quincy.

SA'XIFRAGE, Meadow. n. f. [silanum, Latin.] A plant.

SA'XIFRAGOUS. adj. [saxum, and frango, Latin.] Dissolvent of the stone.

Because goat's blood was found an excellent medicine for the stone, it might be conceived to be able to break a diamond; and so it came to be ordered that the goats should be fed on saxifragous herbs, and such as are conceived of power to break the stone. Brown.

To SAY. v. a. pret. said. [recgan, Sax. seggen, Dutch.]

1. To speak; to utter in words; to tell.

Say it out, Diggon, whatever it hight. Spenser.

In this slumbry agitation what have you heard her say? Shakspere.

Speak unto Solomon; for he will not say thee nay. 1 Kings.

Say nothing to any man, but go thy way. Mark.

2. To allege by way of argument.

After all can be said against a thing, this will still be true, that many things possibly are, which we know not of. Tillotson.

In vain shall we attempt to justify ourselves, as the rich young man in the gospel did, by appealing to the great duties of the law; unless we can say somewhat more, even that we have been liberal in our distributions to the poor. Atterbury.

3. To tell in any manner.

With flying speed, and seeming great pretence,
Came messenger with letters which his message said. Fairy Queen.

4. To repeat; to rehearse: as, to say a part; to say a lesson.

5. To pronounce without singing.

Then shall be said or sung as follows. Com. Prayer.

To SAY. v. n.

1. To speak; to pronounce; to utter; to relate.

He said, moreover, I have somewhat to say unto thee; and she said, say on. 1 Kings.

The council-table and star-chamber hold, as Thucydides said of the Athenians, for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.

The lion here has taken his right measures, that is to say, he has made a true judgment. L'Estrange.

Of some propositions it may be difficult to say whether they affirm or deny; as when we say, Plato was no fool. Watts.

2. In poetry, say is often used before a question; tell.

Say first what cause

Mov'd our grand parents to fall off? Milton.

Say, Stella, feel you no content,

Reflecting on a life well spent? Swift.

And who more blest, who chain'd his country;

Or he whose virtue figh'd to lose a day? Pope.

SAY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A speech; what one has to say.

He no sooner said out his say, but up rises a cunning soap. L'Estrange.

2. [for assay.] Sample.

So good a say invites the eye,

A little downward to espy

The lively clusters of her breasts. Sidney.

Since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,

And that thy tongue some say of breeding breathes,

By rule of knighthood I did aim. Shakespeare.

3. Trial by a sample.

This gentleman having brought that earth to the publick say masters, and upon their being unable to bring it to fusion, or make it fly away, he had procured a little of it, and with a peculiar flux separated a third part of pure gold. Boyle.

4. [soie, French.] Silk. Obsolete.

5. A kind of woollen stuff.

SA'YING. n. f. [from say.] Expression; words; opinion sententiously delivered.

I thank thee, Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true. Shakspeare.

Moses fled at this saying, and was a stranger in Midian. AEs.

Many are the sayings of the wife,

Extolling patience as the truest fortitude. Milton.

Others try to divert the troubles of other men by pretty and plausible sayings, such as this, that if evils are long, they are but light. Tillotson.

We poetick folks, who must restrain

Our measur'd sayings in an equal chain,

Have troubles utterly unknown to those,

Who let their fancy loose in rambling prose. Prior.

The sacred function can never be hurt by their sayings, if not first reproached by our doings. Atterb.

SCAB. n. f. [scab, Saxon; scabbia, Ital. schabbe, Dutch; scabies, Latin.]

1. An incrustation formed over a sore by dried matter.

What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,

That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,

Make yourselves scabs? Shakspeare.

That free from gouts thou may'st preserve thy care,

And clear from scabs produc'd by freezing air. Dryd.

2. The itch or mange of horses.

3. A paltry fellow, so named from the itch often incident to negligent poverty.

I would thou did'st itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the loathsome'st scab in Greece. Shakspeare.

Well said, Wart, thou art a good scab; there is a tester for thee. Shakspeare.

One of the usurers, a head man of the city, took it in dudgeon to be ranked, cheek by jowl, with a scab of a currier. L'Estrange.

This vap'ring scab must needs devise

To ape the thunder of the skies. Swift.

SCA'BBARD. n. f. [schap, German. Junius.] The sheath of a sword.

Enter fortune's gate,

Nor in thy scabbard sheath that famous blade,

'Till settled be thy kingdom and estate. Fairfax.

What eyes! how keen their glances! you do well to keep 'em veil'd; they are too sharp to be trusted out o' th' scabbard. Dryden.

SCA'BBED. adj. [from scab.]

1. Covered or diseased with scabs.

The briar fruit makes those that eat them scabbed. Bacon.

2. Paltry; sorry; vile; worthless.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw

Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw. Dryden.

SCA'BBEDNESS. n. f. [from scabbed.] The state of being scabby.

SCA'BBINESS. n. f. [from scabby.] The quality of being scabby.

SCA'BBY. adj. [from scab.] Diseased with scabs.

Her writhled skin, as rough as maple rind,

So scabby was, that would have loath'd all woman-kind. Fairy Queen.

A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick,

When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.

If the grazier should bring me one wether fat and well fleeced, and expect the same price for a whole hundred, without giving me security to restore my money for those that were lean, shorn, or scabby, I would be none of his customer. Swift.

SCA'BIOUS. adj. [scabiosus, Latin.] Itchy; leprous.

In the spring scabious eruptions upon the skin were epidemical, from the acidity of the blood. Arbutnot.

SCA'BIOUS. n. f. [scabieuse, French; scabiosa, Latin.] A plant.

SCA'BROUS. adj. [scabreux, French; scaber, Latin.]

1. Rough; rugged; pointed on the surface.

Urine, black and bloody, is occasioned by something sharp or scabrous wounding the small blood-vessels: if the stone is smooth and well bedded, this may not happen. Arbutnot.

2. Harsh; unmusical.

Lucretius is scabrous and rough in these: he seeks them, as some do Chaucerisms, which were better

expunged. Ben Jonson.

SCA'BROUSNESS. n. f. [from scabrous.] Roughness; ruggedness.

SCA'BWORT. n. f. [helenium.] A plant. Ainsworth.

SCAD. n. f. A kind of fish. Probably the same with shad.

Of round fish there are sprat, bairn, smelts, and scad. Carew.

SCA'FFOLD. n. f. [eschafaut, French; schavot, Dutch, from schawen, to show.]

1. A temporary gallery or stage raised either for shows or spectators.

Pardon

The flat unraised spirit, that hath dar'd

On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth

So great an object. Shakspeare.

The throng

On banks and scaffolds under sky might stand. Milton.

2. The gallery raised for execution of great malefactors.

Fortune smiling at her fortune therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation. Sidney.

3. Frames of timber erected on the side of a building for the workmen.

These outward beauties are but the props and scaffolds

On which we built our love, which, now made

perfect,

Stands without those supports. Denham.

Sylla added three hundred commons to the senate;

then abolished the office of tribune, as being only a scaffold to tyranny, whereof he had no further use. Swift.

To SCA'FFOLD. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with frames of timber.

SCA'FFOLDAGE. n. f. [from scaffold.]

Gallery; hollow floor.

A strutting player doth think it rich

To hear the wooden dialogue and sound,

'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage. Shakspeare.

SCA'FFOLDING. n. f. [from scaffold.]

1. Temporary frames or stages.

What are riches, empire, power,

But steps by which we climb to rise, and reach

Our wish? and, that obtain'd, down with the scaffolding

Of sceptres and of thrones. Congreve.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure. Pope.

2. Building slightly erected.

Send forth your lab'ring thought;

Let it return with empty notions fraught,

Of airy columns every moment broke,

Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke;

Yet this solution but once more affords

New change of terms and scaffolding of words. Prior.

SCALA'DE } n. f. [French; scalada, Spa-

SCALA'DO. } nish, from scala, Latin, a ladder.] A storm given to a place by raising ladders against the walls.

What can be more strange than that we should within two months have won one town of importance by scalado, battered and assaulted another, and overthrown great forces in the field? Bacon.

Thou raisedst thy voice to record the stratagems,

the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalade of needy heroes, the terror of your peaceful citizens. Arbutnot.

SCA'LARY. adj. [from scala, Latin.]

Proceeding by steps like those of a ladder.

He made at nearer distances certain elevated places and scalary ascents, that they might better ascend or mount their horses. Brown.

To SCALD. v. a. [scaldare, Italian; calidus, Latin.]

1. To burn with hot liquor.

I am scalded with my violent motion,

And spleen of speed to see you. Shakspeare.

O majesty!

When thou do'st pinch thy bearer, thou do'st fit

Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,

That scalds with safety. Shakspeare.

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound

Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears

Do scald like molten lead. Shakspeare.

Here the blue flames of scalding brimstone fall,

Involving swiftly in one ruin all. Cowley.

That I grieve, 'tis true;

But 'tis a grief of fury, not despair!

And if a manly drop or two fall down,

It scalds along my cheeks, like the greenwood,

That, spitt'ring in the flame, works outward into tears. Dryden.

It depends not on his will to persuade himself, that what actually scalds him, feels cold. Locke.

Warm cataplasms discuss; but scalding hot may confirm the tumour: heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions. Arbutnot.

The best thing we can do with Wood is to scald

him;

For which operation there's nothing more proper

Than the liquor he deals in, his own melted copper. Swift.

2. A provincial phrase in husbandry.

In Oxfordshire the four land they fallow when the sun is pretty high, which they call a scalding fallow. Mortimer.

SCALD. n. f. [from the verb.] Scurf on the head.

Her head, altogether bald,

Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald. Spenser.

SCALD. adj. Paltry; sorry; scurvy.

Saucy lictors

Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhymers

Ballad us out o'tune. Shakspeare.

SCALDHEAD. n. f. [skalladur, bald, Islandic. Hicks.] A loathsome disease; a kind of local leprosy in which the head is covered with a continuous scab.

The serum is corrupted by the infection of the touch of a salt humour, to which the scab, pox, and scalp-bead are referable. Floyer.

SCALE. n. f. [scale, Saxon; schael, Dutch; skal, Islandick.]

1. A balance; a vessel suspended by a beam against another vessel; the dish of a balance.

If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound, if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair, Thou diest. Shakspeare.

Your vows to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales. Shakspeare.
Here's an equivocator, that could swear, in both
The scales, against either scale. Shakspeare.
Long time in even scale

The battle hung. Milton.
The world's scales are even; what the main
In one place gets, another quits again. Cleaveland.
The scales are turn'd, her kindness weighs no more

Now than my vows. Waller.
In full assemblies let the crowd prevail;
I weigh no merit by the common scale,
The conscience is the test. Dryden.

If we consider the dignity of an intelligent being,
and put that in the scales against brute inanimate matter, we may affirm, without overvaluing human nature, that the soul of one virtuous and religious man is of greater worth and excellency than the sun and his planets. Bentley.

2. The sign Libra in the zodiac.

Juno pours out the urn, and Vulcan claims
The scales, as the just product of his flames. Creech.

3. [escaille, French; squama, Lat.] Small shell or crust, of which many lying one over another make the coats of fishes.

He puts him on a coat of mail,
Which was made of a fish's scale. Drayton.
Standing aloof, with lead they bruise the scales,
And tear the flesh of the incensed whales. Waller.

4. Any thing exfoliated or desquamated;
a thin lamina.

Take jet and the scales of iron, and with a wet feather, when the smith hath taken an heat, take up the scales that fly from the iron, and those scales
you shall grind upon your painter's stone. Peacbam.
When a scale of bone is taken out of a wound, burning retards the separation. Sharp.

5. [scala, a ladder, Latin.] Ladder;
means of ascent.

Love refines
The thoughts, and heart enlarges; hath his seat
In reason, and is judicious; is the scale
By which to heav'nly love thou may'st ascend. Milt.
On the bendings of these mountains the marks of several ancient scales of stairs may be seen, by which they used to ascend them. Addison.

6. The act of storming by ladders.

Others to a city strong Lay siege, encamp'd; by batt'ry, scale, and mine Assaulting. Milton.

7. Regular gradation; a regular series rising like a ladder.

Well hast thou the scale of nature set,
From centre to circumference; whereon
In contemplation of created things,
By steps we may ascend to God. Milton.
The scale of the creatures is a matter of high speculation. Grew.

The higher nature still advances, and preserves his superiority in the scale of being. Addison.
All the integral parts of nature have a beautiful analogy to one another, and to their mighty original, whose images are more or less expressive, according to their several gradations in the scale of beings. Cheyne.

We believe an invisible world, and a scale of spiritual beings, all nobler than ourselves. Bentley.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual mental pow'rs ascends. Pope.

VOL. II.

8. A figure subdivided by lines like the steps of a ladder, which is used to measure proportions between pictures and the thing represented.

The map of London was set out in the year 1658, by Mr. Newcourt, drawn by a scale of yards. Graunt.

9. The series of harmonick or musical proportions.

The bent of his thoughts and reasonings run up and down this scale, that no people can be happy but under good governments. Temple.

10. Any thing marked at equal distances.

They take the flow o' th' Nile
By certain scale i' th' pyramid: they know
By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth
Or foison follow. Shakspeare.

To SCALE. v. a. [scalare, Italian.]

1. [from scala, a ladder.] To climb as by ladders.

Often have I scal'd the craggy oak,
All to dislodge the raven of her nest;
How have I wearied, with many a stroke,
The stately walnut-tree, the while the rest
Under the tree fell all for nuts at strife! Spenser.
They assailed the breach, and others with their scaling ladders scal'd the walls. Knolles.
The way seems difficult and steep, to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe. Milton.
Heav'n with these engines had been scal'd,
When mountains heap'd on mountains fail'd. Waller.

When the bold Typhæus scal'd the sky,
And forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods all suffer'd. Dryden.

2. [from scale, a balance.] To measure or compare; to weigh.

You have found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy. Shakspeare.

3. [from scale of a fish.] To strip of scales; to take off in a thin lamina.

Raphael was sent to scale away the whiteness of Tobit's eyes. Tobit.

4. To pare off a surface.

If all the mountains were scal'd, and the earth made even, the waters would not overflow its smooth surface. Burnet.

To SCALE. v. n. To peel off in thin particles.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster and crab; the old skins are found, but the old shells never; so as it is like they scale off, and crumble away by degrees. Bacon.

SCA'LED. adj. [from scale.] Squamous;
having scales like fishes.

Half my Egypt was submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scal'd snakes. Shakspeare.

SCALE'NE. n. f. [French; scalenum, Lat.]

lonia, Latin.] A kind of onion.

SCA'LLOP. n. f. [escallop, French.] A fish with a hollow pectinated shell.

So th' emperor Caligula,
That triumph'd o'er the British sea,
Engag'd his legions in fierce battles
With periwinkles, prawns, and muscles;
And led his troops with furious gallops,
To charge whole regiments of scallops. Hudibras.

The land is in Scilly glittering, which may be occasioned from freestone mingled with white scallop shells. Mortimer.

To SCA'LLOP. v. a. To mark on the edge with segments of circles.

SCALP. n. f. [schelpe, Dutch, a shell;
scalpo, Italian.]

1. The scull; the cranium; the bone that encloses the brain.

High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made. Fairy Queen.

If the fracture be not complicated with a wound of the scalp, or the wound is too small to admit of the operation, the fracture must be laid bare by taking away a large piece of the scalp. Sharp.

2. The integuments of the head.

White beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps
Against thy majesty. Shakspeare.

The hairy scalps
Are whirl'd aloof, while numerous trunks bestrow
Th' ensanguin'd field. Philips.

To SCALP. v. a. [from the noun.] To deprive the scull of its integuments.

We seldom inquire for a fracture of the scull by scalping, but that the scalp itself is contused. Sharp.

SCALPEL. n. f. [French; scalpelleum, Latin.] An instrument used to scrape
a bone by surgeons.

SCA'LY. adj. [from scale.] Covered with scales.

So hear the scaly herd when Proteus blows,
And so to pasture follow through the sea. Dryden.
A scaly fish with a forked tail. Woodward.

To SCA'MBLE. v. n. [This word, which is scarcely in use, has much exercised the etymological sagacity of Meric Ca- saubon; but, as is usual, to no purpose.]

1. To be turbulent and rapacious; to scramble; to get by struggling with others.

Have fresh chaff in the bin,
And somewhat to scamble for hog and for hen. Tusser.

Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mong'ring boys,
That lie, and cog, and flout, deprave and slander. Shakspeare.

That self bill is urg'd, and had against us past,
But that the scambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of further question. Shakspeare.

He was no sooner entered into the town but a scambling soldier clapt hold of his bridle, which he thought was in a begging or a drunken fashion. Wotton.

2. To shift awkwardly.

Some scambling shifts may be made without them. More.

To SCA'MBLE. v. a. To mangle; to maul.
My wood was cut in patches, and other parts of it scambled, and cut before it was at its growth. Mortimer.

SCA'MBLER. n. f. [Scottish.] A bold intruder upon one's generosity or table.

SCA'MBLINGLY. adv. [from scambling.]

 A hunted hare treads back her mazes, crosses and confounds her former track, and uses all possible methods to divert the scent. Watts.
 2. The object of smell; odour good or bad.
 Bellman cried upon it at the meekest loss,
 And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent. Shakespeare.
 The plague, they report, hath a scent of the smell of a mellow apple. Bacon.
 Good scents do purify the brain,
 Awake the fancy, and the wits refine. Davies.
 Partake
 The season, prime for sweetest scents and airs. Milton.
 Exulting, 'till he finds their nobler sense
 Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
 Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
 Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Denham.
 Cheerful health,
 His duteous handmaid, through the air improv'd,
 With lavish hand diffuses scents ambrosial. Prior.
 3. Chace followed by the smell.
 He gained the observations of innumerable ages,
 and travelled upon the same scent into Æthiopia. Temple.
To SCENT. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To smell; to perceive by the nose.
 So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
 His nostrils wide into the murky air,
 Sagacious of his quarry from so far. Milton.
 2. To perfume; or to imbue with odour good or bad.
 Balm, from a silver box distill'd around,
 Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryden.
 Actæon spies
 His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries;
 A gen'rous pack, or to maintain the chace,
 Or snuff the vapour from the scented grafs. Addison.
SCENTLESS. adj. [from scent.] Inodor-ous; having no smell.
SCEPTICK. n. f. See SKEPTICK.
SCEPTRE. n. f. [sceptrum, Lat. sceptre, Fr.] The ensign of royalty born in the hand.
 Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
 Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist. Shakespeare.
 How, best of kings, do'st thou a sceptre bear!
 How, best of poets, do'st thou laurel wear!
 But two things rare the fates had in their store,
 And gave thee both, to shew they could no more. Ben Jonson.
 I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore
 In that right hand which held the crook before. Cowley.
 The parliament presented those acts which were prepared by them to the royal sceptre, in which were some laws retraining the extravagant power of the nobility. Clarendon.
 The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns and sceptres are conferred gratis. Decay of Piety.
SCEPTRED. adj. [from sceptre.] Bearing a sceptre.
 The sceptred heralds call
 To council, in the city-gates. Milton.

SCH

To Britain's queen the scepter'd suppliant bends,
 To her his crowns and infant race commends. Tickel.
SCHEDULE. n. f. [schedula, Lat. schedule, French.]
 1. A small scroll.
 The first published schedules being brought to a grave knight, he read over an unfavorable sentence or two, and delivered back the libel. Hooker.
 2. A writing additional or appendant.
 All ill, which all Prophets or poets spake, and all which shall B' annex'd in schedules unto this by me,
 Fall on that man! Donne.
 3. A little inventory.
 I will give out schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil label'd to my will. Shakespeare.
SCHISMATISM. n. f. [σχισματισμος.]
 1. Combination of the aspects of heavenly bodies.
 2. Particular form or disposition of a thing.
 Every particle of matter, whatever form or schismatism it puts on, must in all conditions be equally extended, and therefore take up the same room. Creech.
SCHISMATIST. n. f. [from scheme.] A projector; one who is given to forming schemes.
SCHEME. n. f. [σχῆμα.]
 1. A plan; a combination of various things into one view, design, or purpose; a system.
 Were our senses made much quicker, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us, and be inconsistent with our well-being. Locke.
 We shall never be able to give ourselves a satisfactory account of the divine conduct, without forming such a scheme of things as shall at once take in time and eternity. Atterbury.
 2. A project; a contrivance; a design.
 He forms the well-concerted scheme of mischief;
 'Tis fix'd, 'tis done, and both are doom'd to death. Rowe.
 The haughty monarch was laying schemes for suppressing the ancient liberties, and removing the ancient boundaries of kingdoms. Atterbury.
 The stoical scheme of supplying our wants by lopping off our desires, is like cutting off our feet when we want shoes. Swift.
 3. A representation of the aspects of the celestial bodies; any lineal or mathematical diagram.
 It hath embroiled astrology in the erection of schemes, and the judgment of death and diseases. Brown.
 It is a scheme and face of heaven,
 As th' aspects are disposed this even. Hudibras.
SCHMER. n. f. [from scheme.] A projector; a contriver.
SCHESIS. n. f. [σχῆσις] A habitude; state of any thing with respect to other things.
 If that mind which has existing in itself from all eternity all the simple essences of things, and consequently all their possible scheses or habitudes, should ever change, there would arise a new schesis in the mind, which is contrary to the supposition. Norris.
SCHISM. n. f. [σχίσμα; schisme, Fr.] A separation or division in the church of God.
 Set bounds to our passions by reason, to our errors by truth, and to our schisms by charity. King Charles.
 Oppose schisms by unity, hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt.
 When a schism is once spread, there grows at length a dispute which are the schismatics: in the sense of the law the schism lies on that side which opposes itself to the religion of the state. Swift.
SCHISMATICAL. adv. [schismatique, Fr.

SCH

from schismatick.] Implying schism; practicing schism.
 By these tumults all factions, seditions, and schismatical proposals against government, ecclesiastical and civil, must be backed. King Charles.
 Here bare anathemas fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the obstinate and schismatical, who are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt by being cut off from that body which they chuse not to be of, and so being punished into a quiet enjoyment of their beloved separation. South.
SCHISMA'TICALLY. adv. [from schismatical.] In a schismatical manner.
SCHISMATICK. n. f. [from schism.] One who separates from the true church.
 No known heretick nor schismatick should be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.
 Thus you behold the schismaticks bravado's Wild speaks in squibs, and Calamy in granado's. Butler.
 The schismaticks united in a solemn league and covenant to alter the whole system of spiritual government. Swift.
To SCHISMATIZE. v. a. [from schism.] To commit the crime of schism; to make a breach in the communion of the church.
SCHOLAR. n. f. [scholaris, Lat. écolier, French.]
 1. One who learns of a master; a disciple.
 Many times that which deserveth approbation would hardly find favour, if they which propose it were not to profess themselves scholars, and followers of the antients. Hooker.
 The scholars of the Stagyrite,
 Who for the old opinion fight,
 Would make their modern friends confess
 The diff'rence but from more to less, Prior.
 2. A man of letters.
 This same scholar's fate, res angusta domi, hinders the promoting of learning. Wilkins.
 To watch occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed for. Locke.
 3. A pedant; a man of books.
 To spend too much time in studies, is sloth; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar: they perfect nature, and are perfected by experience. Bacon.
 4. One who has a lettered education.
 My cousin William is become a good scholar; he is at Oxford still, is he not? Shakespeare.
SCHOLARSHIP. n. f. [from scholar.]
 1. Learning; literature; knowledge.
 It pited my very heart to think that a man of my master's understanding, and great scholarship, who had a book of his own in print, should talk so outrageously. Pope.
 2. Literary education.
 This place should be school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship. Milton.
 3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar. Ainsworth.
SCHOLA'STICAL. adj. [scholasticus, Lat.] Belonging to a scholar or school.
SCHOLA'STICALLY. adv. [from scholastic.] According to the niceties or method of the schools.
 No moralists or casuists, that treat scholastically of justice, but treat of gratitude, under that general head, as a part of it. South.
SCHOLA'STICK. adj. [from schola, Lat. scholastique, French.]
 1. Pertaining to the school; practised in schools.
 I would render this intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning. Digby.
Scholastic education, like a trade, does so fix a man in a particular way, that he is not fit to judge of any thing that lies out of that way. Burnet.

2. Befitting the school; suitable to the school; pedantick; needlessly subtle.

The favour of proposing there, in convenient sort, whatsoever ye can object, which thing I have known them to grant, of scholastick courtesy unto strangers, never hath nor ever will be denied you. Hooker.

Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless scholastick speculations, were like the Olympick gamesters, who abstained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for such as were not so. Bacon.

Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of conscience, and not a scholastick nicety. Stillington.

SCHOLIAST. n. f. [scholiasie, Fr. scholiasiste, Lat.] A writer of explanatory notes.

The title of this satyr, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholastics, 'tis inscribed against the luxury of the rich. Dryden.

What Gellius or Stobæus cook'd before,
Or chew'd by blind old scholastics o'er and o'er. Pope.

SCHOLION. n. f. [Lat.] A note; an explanatory observation.

Hereunto have I added a certain gloss or scholium, for the explication of old words, and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language. Spenser.

Some cast all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, postulates, scholiums, and corollaries. Watts.

SCHOLY. n. f. [scholie, Fr. scholium, Lat.] An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.

He therefore, which made us to live, hath also taught us to pray, to the end, that speaking unto the Father in the Son's own prescript form, without scholy or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.

That scholy had need of a very favourable reader, and a tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commanded to the word, and grounded upon the word, are made all one. Hooker.

To SCHOLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To write expositions.

The preacher should want a text, whereupon to scholy. Hooker.

SCHOOL. n. f. [schola, Lat. école, Fr.]

1. A house of discipline and instruction.

Their age the same, their inclinations too,
And bred together in one school they grew. Dryden.

2. A place of literary education; an university.

My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.

Writers on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, trifles, and subtilties, for the mere use of the schools, and that only to amuse men with empty sounds. Watts.

3. A state of instruction.

The calf breed to the rural trade,
Set him betimes to school, and let him be instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden.

4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers.

No craz'd brain could ever yet propound,
Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought;
But some among these masters have been found,
Which in their schools the self-same thing had taught. Davies.

Let no man be less confident in his faith, concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof. Taylor.

5. The age of the church, and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers; so called, because this mode of treating religion arose from the use of academical disputations.

The first principles of christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets. Sanderfon.

A man may find an infinite number of propositions in books of metaphysics, school divinity, and natural philosophy, and know as little of God, spirits, or bodies, as he did before. Locke.

To SCHOOL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct; to train.
Una her besought to be so good
As in her virtuous rules to school her knight. Fairy Queen.

He's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned. Shakespeare.

2. To teach with superiority; to tutor.

You shall go with me;
I have some private schooling for you both. Shakspeare.

Cousin, school yourself; but for your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious. Shakspeare.

School your child,
And ask why God's anointed he revil'd. Dryden.

If this be schooling, 'tis well for the considerer:
I'll engage that no adversary of his shall in this sense ever school him. Atterbury.

SCHOOLBOY. n. f. [school and boy.] A boy that is in his rudiments at school.

Schoolboys tears take up
The glasses of my sight. Shakspeare.

He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch endures,
As 'prentices or schoolboys, which do know
Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go. Donne.

Once he had heard a schoolboy tell,
How Semele of mortal race
By thunder died. Swift.

SCHOOLDAY. n. f. [school and day.] Age in which youth is sent to school.

Is all forgot?
All schooldays friendship, childhood, innocence? Shakspeare.

SCHOOLFELLOW. n. f. [school and fellow.] One bred at the same school.

Thy flatter'd method on the youth pursue;
Join'd with his schoolfellow by two and two:
Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,
In length of time produce the lab'ring yoke. Dryden.

The emulation of schoolfellows often puts life and industry into young lads. Locke.

SCHOOLHOUSE. n. f. [school and house.] House of discipline and instruction.

Fair Una gan Fideia fair request,
To have her knight unto her schoolhouse plac'd. Spenser.

SCHOOLMAN. n. f. [school and man.]

1. One versed in the niceties and subtilties of academical disputation.

The king, though no good schoolman, converted one of them by dispute. Bacon.

Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art;
No language, but the language of the heart. Pope.

2. A writer of scholastick divinity or philosophy.

If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen. Bacon.

To schoolmen I bequeath my doubtfulness,
My sickness to physicians. Donne.

Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as he was dress'd up by the schoolmen. Baker.

Let subtle schoolmen teach these friends to fight,
More studious to divide than to unite. Pope.

SCHOOLMASTER. n. f. [school and master.] One who presides and teaches in a school.

I, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vain hours, and tutors not so careful. Shakspeare.

Adrian vi. was some time schoolmaster to Charles v. Knolles.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived 'till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbilius. Bacon.

A father may see his children taught, though he himself does not turn schoolmaster. South.

SCHOOLMISTRESS. n. f. [school and mistress.] A woman who governs a school.

Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have from nature, that exact schoolmistress. Dryden.

My schoolmistress, like a vixen Turk,
Maintains her lazy husband by our work. Gay.

SCHREIGHT. n. f. [turdus viscivorus.] A fish. Ainsworth.

SCI'AGRAPHY. n. f. [sciagraphe, Fr. σκιγραφή.]

1. [In architecture.] The profile or section of a building, to show the inside thereof. Bailey.

2. [In astronomy.] The art of finding the hour of the day or night by the shadow of the sun, moon, or stars. Bailey.

SCI'ATHERICAL. adj. [sciaterique, Fr. σκιαιτρικ.] Belonging to a sundial.

There were also, from great antiquity, sciatherical or sun dials by the shadow of a stile or gnomon denoting the hours; an invention ascribed unto Anaxamines by Pliny. Brown.

SCI'ATHERICK. adj. [σκιαιτρικ.] Belonging to a sundial. Di.

SCIATICA. n. f. [sciaticque, Fr. ischia-

SCIATICK. n. f. [dica passio, Lat.] The hip gout.

Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shakspeare.

Thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners. Shakspeare.

The Scythians, using continual riding, were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout. Brown.

Rack'd with sciatick, martyr'd with the stone,
Will any mortal let himself alone? Pope.

SCIATICAL. adj. [from sciatica.] Afflicting the hip.

In obstinate sciatical pains, blistering and cauteries have been found effectual. Arbutnot.

SCIENCE. n. f. [science, Fr. scientia, Latin.]

1. Knowledge.

If we conceive God's sight or science, before the creation, to be extended to all and every part of the world, seeing every thing as it is, his prescience or foresight of any action of mine, or rather his science or sight from all eternity, lays no necessity on any thing to come to pass, more than my seeing the sun move hath to do in the moving of it. Hammond.

The indisputable mathematicks, the only science heaven hath yet vouchsafed humanity, have but few votaries among the slaves of the Stagirite. Glanville.

2. Certainty grounded on demonstration.

So you arrive at truth, though not at science. Berkley.

3. Art attained by precepts, or built on principles.

Science perfects genius, and moderates the fury of the fancy which cannot contain itself within the bounds of reason. Dryden.

4. Any art or species of knowledge.

No science doth make known the first principles whereon it buildeth; but they are always taken as plain and manifest in themselves, or as proved and granted already, some former knowledge having made them evident. Hooker.

Whatsoever we may learn of them, we only attain according to the manner of natural sciences, which mere discourse of wit and reason findeth out. Hooker.

I present you with a man
Cunning in musick and the mathematicks,
To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shakspeare.

5. One of the seven liberal arts, grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, music, geometry, astronomy.

Good sense, which only is the gift of heaven,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven. Pope.

SCIENTIAL. adj. [from science.] Producing science.

From the tree her step she turn'd;
But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
That dwelt within; whose presence had insus'd

Into the plant scientia sap, deriv'd
From nectar, drink of gods. Milton.
SCIENTIFIC. } adj. [scientifique, Fr.
SCIENTIFIC. } scientia and facio, Latin.] Producing demonstrative knowledge; producing certainty.

Natural philosophy proceeding from settled principles, therein is expected a satisfaction from scien- tific progressions, and such as beget a sure or rational belief. Brown.

Nowhere are there more quick, inventive, and penetrating capacities, fraught with all kind of sci- entific knowledge. Howell.

No man, who first trafficks into a foreign country, has any scientific evidence that there is such a country, but by report, which can produce no more than a moral certainty; that is, a very high probability, and such as there can be no reason to except against. South.

The systems of natural philosophy that have obtained, are to be read more to know the hypotheses, than with hopes to gain there a comprehensive,
scientific, and satisfactory knowledge of the works of nature. Locke.

SCIENTIFICALLY. adv. [from scientific- cal.] In such a manner as to produce knowledge.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, because it is easier to believe than to be scientifically instructed.
Locke.

SCIMITAR. n. f. [See CIMETER.] A short sword with a convex edge.

I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.
Shakespeare.

SCINK. n. f. A cast calf. Ainsworth. In Scotland and in London they call it flink.

TO SCINTILLATE. v. n. [scintillo,
Lat.] To sparkle; to emit sparks.

SCINTILLATION. n. f. [scintillatio, Lat.
from scintillate.] The act of sparkling;
sparks emitted.

These scintillations are not the accension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the bodies collided. Brown.

He saith the planets scintillation is not seen, because of their propinquity. Glanville.

SCIOLIST. n. f. [sciolus, Lat.] One who knows many things superficially.

'Twas this vain idolizing of authors which gave birth to that silly vanity of impertinent citations:
these ridiculous fooleries signify nothing to the more generous discerners, but the pedantry of the affected sciolists. Glanville.

These passages were enough to humble the presumption of our modern sciolists, if their pride were not as great as their ignorance. Temple.

SCIOLOUS. adj. [sciolus, Lat.] Superficially or imperfectly knowing. Not used.

I could wish these sciolous zelotists had more judgment joined with their zeal. Howell.

SCIOMACHY. n. f. [schiamachie, French;
σχια and μαχη.] Battle with a shadow.
This should be written skiamachy.

To avoid this sciomachy, or imaginary combat of words, let me know, sir, what you mean by the name of tyrant? Cowley.

SCION. n. f. [scion, Fr.] A small twig taken from one tree to be ingrafted into another.

Sweet maid, we marry
A gentle scion to the wildest stock;
And make conceive a bark of baser kind
By bud of nobler race. Shakespeare.

March is drawn, in his left hand blossoms, and scions upon his arm. Peacbam.

The scions are best of an old tree. Mortimer.

SCIRE FACIAS. n. f. [Latin.] A writ judicial, in law, most commonly to call a man to shew cause unto the court whence

it is sent, why execution of a judgment passed should not be made. This writ is not granted before a year and a day is passed after the judgment given. Cowell.

SCIRRHO'SITY. n. f. [from scirrhus.] An induration of the glands.

The difficulty of breathing, occasioned by scirrho- sities of the glands, is not to be cured. Arbutnot.

SCIRRHOUS. adj. [from scirrhus.] Having a gland indurated; consisting of a gland indurated.

How they are to be treated when they are strumous, scirrhus, or cancerous, you may see. Wiseman.

SCIRRHUS. n. f. [scirrhe, French. This should be written skirrhus, not merely because it comes from σκίρρος, but because c in English has before e and i the sound of s. See SKEPTICK.] An indurated gland.

Any of these three may degenerate into a scirrbus, and that scirrbus into a cancer. Wiseman.

SCI'SSIBLE. adj. [from scissus, Lat.] Capable of being divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

The differences of impressible and not impressible, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter, are plebeian notions. Bacon.

SCI'SSILE. adj. [scissile, Fr. scissilis, Lat.]
Capable of being cut or divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

Animal fat is a sort of amphibious substance,
scissile like a solid, and resolvable by heat.
Arbutnot.

SCI'SSION. n. f. [scission, Fr. scissio, Lat.]
The act of cutting.

Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture:
the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly cease from action. Wiseman.

SCI'SSOR. n. f. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write cisors, from cædo, or incido; others scissors, from scindo; and some cizars, cizars, or scissars, from ciseaux, French.]
A small pair of sheers, or blades moveable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.

His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever, as it blaz'd, they threw on him

Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair;
My master preaches patience to him, and the while His man with scissars picks him for a fool. Shaksp.

Wanting the scissars, with these hands I'll tear,
If that obstruct my flight, this load of hair. Prior.

When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant bills, fir Roger wore a pair of scissars in his pocket, with which he would snip a quarter of a yard off nicely. Arbutnot.

SCI'SSURE. n. f. [scissum, Lat.] A crack;
a rent; a fissure.

The breach seems like the scissures and ruptures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

SCLEROTICK. adj. [sclerotique, French; σκληρός.] Hard: an epithet of one of the coats of the eye.

The ligaments observed in the inside of the sclero- tick tunics of the eye, serve instead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye.
Ray on the Creation.

SCLEROTICKS. n. f. [from the adjective.]
Medicines which harden and consolidate the parts they are applied to. Quincy.

TO SCOAT. } v. a. To stop a wheel by
TO SCOTCH. } putting a stone or piece of wood under it before. Bailey.

TO SCOFF. v. n. [schoppen, Dutch.] To treat with insolent ridicule; to treat with contumelious language: with at.

Of two noblemen of the west of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than prophane to scoff at religion. Tillotson.

Such is love,

And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,
And scoffs at the vain wisdom of the wife. Rowe.

SCOFF. n. f. [from the verb.] Contemptuous ridicule; expression of scorn; contumelious language.

Our answer therefore to their reasons is, no; to their scoffs, nothing. Hacker.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts,
In open market-place produc'd they me. Shaksp.

How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scoffs and the sharpest invectives? South.

Some little souls, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scoff at them all in comparison of their favourite science. Watts.

SCOFFER. n. f. [from scoff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scorner; contumelious reproacher.

Sell when you can; you are not for all markets;
Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer;
Foul is the most foul, being found to be a scoffer.
Shakespeare.

Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane scoffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies.
Government of the Tongue.

Consider what the apostle tells these scoffers they were ignorant of; not that there was a deluge, but he tells them that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were so and so constituted. Burnet.

SCOFFINGLY. adv. [from scoffing.] In contempt; in ridicule.

Aristotle applied this hemistick scoffingly to the sycophants at Athens. Broome.

TO SCOLD. v. n. [scholden, Dutch.] To quarrel clamorously and rudely.

Pardon me, 'tis the first time that ever
I'm forc'd to scold. Shakespeare.

The one as famous for a scolding tongue,
As th' other is for beauteous modesty. Shakespeare.

They attacked me, some with piteous moans, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others
ranting, and others scolding and reviling. Stillingsf.

For gods, we are by Homer told,
Can in celestial language scold. Swift.

Scolding and curling are her common conversation. Swift.

SCOLD. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, rude, mean, low, foul-mouthed woman.

A shrew in domestick life is now become a scold
in politicks. Addison.

Sun-burnt matrons mending old nets;
Now singing shrill, and scolding oft between;
Scolds answer foul-mouth'd scolds. Swift.

SCOLOPENDRA. n. f. [scolopendre, Fr.
σκολοπενδρα.]

1. A sort of venomous serpent.

2. [scolopendrium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsw.

SCOMM. n. f. [perhaps from scommā, Lat.]
A buffoon. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The scomms, or buffoons, of quality are wolfish in conversation. L'Estrange.

SCONCE. n. f. [schantz, German.]

1. A fort; a bulwark.

Such fellows are perfect in the great commanders names, and they will learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a sconce, at such a breach. Shakespeare.

2. The head: perhaps as being the acro- polis, or citadel, of the body. A low word.
Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Shakspeare.

 3. A pensile candlestick, generally with a looking-glass to reflect the light.
*Golden sconces hang upon the walls,
 To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dryden.*
Triumphant Umbriel, on a sconce's height, Clapp'd his glad wings, and sat to view the fight. Pope.

Put candles into sconces. Swift.

4. A mulct, or fine.

TO SCONCE. v. a. [A word used in the universities, and derived plausibly by Skinner, whose etymologies are generally rational, from sconce, as it signifies the head; to sconce being to fix a fine on any one's head.] To mulct; to fine. A low word, which ought not to be retained.

SCOOP. n. f. [schoepe, Dutch.]

1. A kind of large ladle; a vessel with a long handle used to throw out liquor.

Endeavour with thy scoop, or fingers, to force the stone outwards. Sharp.
3. A sweep; a stroke. Perhaps it should be swoop.

O hell-kite!

What, all my pretty chickens and their dam
 At one fell scoop! Shakspeare.

TO SCOOP. v. a. [schopen, Dutch.]

1. To lade out.
*As by the brook he stood,
 He scoop'd the water from the crystal flood. Dryd.*
2. This word seems to have not been understood by Thomson.
*Melted Alpine snows
 The mountain cisterns fill, those ample stores
 Of water scoop'd among the hollow rocks. Thomson.*
3. To empty by lading.
*If some penurious source by chance appear'd
 Scanty of waters, when you scoop'd it dry,
 And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
 Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him? Addison.*

4. To carry off, so as to leave the place hollow.

A spectator would think this circular mount had been actually scooped out of that hollow space.

Spectator.

Her fore-feet are broad, that she may scoop away much earth at a time.

Addison.

To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
 Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
 A fork staff we dextrously applied,
 Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
 Scoop'd out the big round jelly from its orb. Addis.

5. To cut into hollowness or depth.

Whatever part of the harbour they scoop in, it has an influence on all the rest; for the sea immediately works the whole bottom to a level.

Addison.

Those carbuncles the Indians will scoop, so as to hold above a pint.

Arbutnot.

It much conduces how to scoop
 The little race of birds, that hop
 From spray to spray, scooping the costliest fruit, Insatiate, undisturb'd. Philips.

The genius of the place
 Or helps th' ambitious hill the heav'n to scale,
 Or scoops in circling theatres the vale. Pope.

SCOOPER. n. f. [from scoop.] One who scoops.

SCOPE. n. f. [scopus, Latin.]

1. Aim; intention; drift.

Your scope is as mine own,
 So to enforce or qualify the laws,
 As to your soul seems good. Shakspeare.

His coming hither hath no farther scope
 Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Infranchisement immediate on his knees. Shaksp.

Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison.

2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.

The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as, depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world. Hooker.

Now was time

To aim their counsels to the fairest scope. Hub. Ta.
 We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth. Raleigh.

He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
 Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
 And utter dissolution, as the scope
 Of all his aim. Milton.

3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.

An heroic poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination. Dryden.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction. Newton.

4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it resteth that they search out some stronger reason. Hooker.

Ah, cut my lace asunder,

That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
 Or else I swoon with this dead killing news. Shakspeare.

5. Liberty beyond just limits; licence.

Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
 'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them
 For what I bid them do. Shakspeare.

Being moody, give him line and scope,
 Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
 Confound themselves with working. Shakspeare.

6. Act of riot; folly.

As surfeit is the father of much fast,
 So every scope, by the immoderate use,
 Turns to restraint. Shakspeare.

7. Extended quantity.

The scopes of land granted to the first adventurers were too large, and the liberties and royalties were too great for subjects. Davies.

8. It is out of use, except in the first three senses.

SCO'PULOUS. adj. [scopulosus, Lat.] Full of rocks. Dict.

SCORBU'TICAL. } adj. [scorbutique, Fr.
SCORBU'TICK. } from scorbutus, Lat.]

Diseased with the scurvy.

A person about forty, of a full and scorbutical body, having broke her skin, endeavoured the curing of it; but observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion. Wiseman.

Violent purging hurts scorbutick constitutions; lenitive substances relieve. Arbutnot.

SCORBU'TICALLY. adv. [from scorbutical.]
 With tendency to the scurvy; in the scurvy.

A woman of forty, scorbutically and hydropically affected, having a fordid ulcer, put herself into my hand. Wiseman.

SCORCE. n. f. This word is used by Spenser for discourse, or power of reason: in imitation perhaps of the Italians.

Lively vigour rested in his mind,
 And recompens'd him with a better score;
 Weak body well is chang'd for mind's redoubled force. Fairy Queen.

TO SCORCH. v. a. [reconed, Saxon, burnt.]

1. To burn superficially.

Fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Eaton.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
 The breath they drew no longer air but fire:
 The fainty knights were scorch'd. Dryden.

2. To burn.

Power was given to scorch men with fire. Revelation.

The same that left thee by the cooling stream,
 Safe from sun's heat, but scorch'd with beauty's beam. Fairfax.

You look with such contempt on pain,
 That languishing you conquer more:
 So lightnings which in storms appear Scorch more than when the skies are clear. Waller.

The same beams that shine, scorch too. South.
 I rave,

And, like a giddy bird in dead of night,
 Fly round the fire that scorches me to death. Dryden.

He, from whom the nations should receive
 Justice and freedom, lives himself a slave;
 Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,
 Lash'd by mad rage, and scorch'd by brutal fires. Prior.

TO SCORCH. v. n. To burn superficially; to be dried up.

The swarthy Africans complain
 To see the chariot of the sun
 So nigh their scorching country run. Roscommon.

The love was made in autumn, and the hunting followed properly when the heats of that scorching country were declining. Dryden.

Scatter a little mungy straw or fern amongst your seedlings, to prevent the roots from scorching, and to receive the moisture that falls. Mortimer.

SCORCHING Fennel. n. f. A plant.

SCORDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SCORE. n. f. [skora, Islandick; a mark, cut, or notch.]

1. A notch, or long incision.
*Our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally; thou hast caused printing to be used. Shakspeare.*

2. A line drawn.
3. An account which, when writing was less common, was kept by marks on tallies, or by lines of chalk.

He's worth no more:

They say he parted well and paid his score. Shaksp.
 Does not the air feed the flame? And does not the flame warm and enlighten the air? Does not the earth quit scores with all the elements, in the fruits that issue from it? South.

4. Account kept of something past; an epoch; an era.

Universal deluges have swept all away, except two or three persons who begun the world again upon a new score. Tillotson.

5. Debt imputed.

That thou dost love her, strikes some scores away
 From the great compt. Shakspeare.

6. Reason; motive.

He had been prentice to a brewer,
 But left the trade; as many more
 Have lately done on the same score. Hudibras.

A lion, that had got a politick fit of sickness, wrote the fox word how glad he should be of his company, upon the score of ancient friendship. L'Estrange.

If your terms are moderate, we'll never break off upon that score. Collier.

7. Sake; account; relative motive.

You act your kindness on Cydaria's score. Dryden.

Kings in Greece were deposed by their people upon the score of their arbitrary proceedings. Swift.

8. Twenty. I suppose, because twenty, being a round number, was distinguished on tallies by a long score.

How many score of miles may we well ride
 'Twixt hour and hour? Shakspeare.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
 Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.
 For some scores of lines there is a perfect absence of that spirit of poetry. Watts.

9. A song in SCORE. The words with the musical notes of a song annexed.

To SCORE. v. a.

1. To set down as a debt.

Madam, I know when Instead of five you scor'd me ten.

Swift.

2. To impute; to charge.

Your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score 'em on the stage;
Unless each vice in short-hand they indite,
Ev'n as notcht prentices whole sermons write.

Dryden.

3. To mark by a line.

Hast thou appointed where the moon should rise,
And with her purple light adorn the skies?
Scor'd out the bounded sun's oblique ways,
That he on all might spread his equal rays? Sandys.

SCORIA. n. f. [Lat.] Dross; recrement.

The scoria, or vitrified part, which most metals, when heated or melted, do continually protrude to the surface, and which, by covering the metals in form of a thin glassy skin, causes these colours, is much denser than water.

Newton.

SCORIOUS. adj. [from scoria, Latin.]

Drossy; recrementitious.

By the fire they emit many drossy and scorious
parts.

Brown.

To SCORN. v. a. [schernen, Dutch;

tears unto God.

Job.

To SCORN. v. n.

1. To scoff; to treat with contumely.

He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And, now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me.

Shakspeare.

Our soul is filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud.

Psalms.

2. To disdain; to think unworthy.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night.

Crashaw.

Fame, that delights around the world to stray,
Scorns not to take our Arges in her way.

Pope.

3. To despise; to condemn.

Surely he scorneth the scorner, but he giveth grace unto the lowly.

Proverbs.

Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,
And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn

The facil gates of hell too slightly barr'd.

Milton.

4. To neglect; to disregard.

This my long sufferance, and my day of grace,
They who neglect and scorn shall never taste;
But hard be harden'd, blind be blinded more.

Milton.

SCORN. n. f. [escorne, old Fr. from the verb.]

1. Contempt; scoff; slight; act of contumely.]

We were better parch in Afric's sun
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes.

Shakspeare.

Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?
Scorn and derision never come in tears.

Shakspeare.

If we draw her not unto us, she will laugh us to scorn.

Judith.

Diogenes was asked in scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, Because the one knew what they wanted, the others did not.

Bacon.

Whosoever hath any thing in his person that induces contempt, hath also a perpetual spur to rescue himself from scorn: therefore all deformed persons are bold, as being on their own defence, as exposed to scorn.

Bacon.

Every fullen frown and bitter scorn
But fann'd the fuel that too fast did burn.

Dryden.

2. Subject of ridicule; thing treated with contempt.

VOL. II.

Is it not a most horrid ingratitude, thus to make a scorn of him that made us?

Tillotson.

Numidia's grown a scorn among the nations
For breach of publick vows.

Addison.

3. To think SCORN. To disdain; to hold unworthy of regard. Not now in use.

If he do fully prove himself the honest shepherd Menalcas his brother and heir, I know no reason why you should think scorn of him.

Sidney.

Unto thee will I cry, O Lord: think no scorn of me, lest, if thou make as though thou hearest not, I become like them that go down into the pit.

Psalms.

4. To laugh to SCORN. To deride as contemptible.

He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh them

Shakspeare.

Prologues, historians note,

Liv'd there a burges, scot and lot.

Prior.

The chief point that has puzzled the freeholders, as well as those that pay scot and lot, for about these six months, is, Whether they would rather be governed by a prince that is obliged by law to be good, or by one who, if he pleases, may plunder or imprison.

Addison.

To SCOTCH. v. a. To cut with shallow incisions.

He was too hard for him; directly before Corioli, he scotcht and notcht him like a carbonado.

Shakspeare.

An upstart sect'ry, and a mungrel.

Hudibras.

Scoundrels as these wretched Ombites be,

Canopus they exceed in luxury.

Tate.

Go, if your ancient but ignoble blood

Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,

Go, and pretend your family is young;

Nor own your fathers have been fools so long.

Pope.

To SCOUR. v. a. [skurer, Danish; scheuren, Dutch.]

1. To rub hard with any thing rough, in order to clean the surface.

I were better to be eaten to death with a rust, than to be scoured to nothing with perpetual motion.

Shakspeare.

By dint of sword his crown he shall increase,

And scour his armour from the rust of peace.

Dryden.

Part scour the rusty shields with seam, and part

New grind the blunted ax, and point the dart.

A garden-worm should be well scoured eight days in moss, before you fish with him.

Walton.

Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,

The new scour'd manteau, and the flattern air.

Gay.

4. To remove by scouring.

Never came reformation in a flood

With such a heady current, scouring faults;

Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness

So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,

As in this king.

Shakspeare.

I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favour in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it.

Shakspeare.

Then in the clemency of upward air
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder's fear.

Dryden.

5. [scorrere, Italian.] To range about, in order to catch or drive away something; to clear away.

Sidney.

Divers are kept continually to scour these seas, infested greatly by pirates.

Sandys.

If with thy guards thou scour'st the streets by night,

And dost in murders, rapes, and spoils delight,
Please not thyself the flatt'ring crowd to hear.

Dryden.

6. To pass swiftly over.

Sometimes

He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left.

Milton.

Not half the number in their seats are found,
But men and steeds lie growling on the ground;
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,
The knights unhors'd.

Dryden.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labours, and the words move slow:
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Pope.

To SCOUR. v. n.

1. To perform the office of cleaning domestic utensils.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds.

SCOUT. n. s. [escout, Fr. from escounter; auscultare, Lat. to listen; scolta, Italian.]

One who is sent privily to observe the motions of the enemy.

Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the dauphin?

Shakspeare.

As when a scout,
Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn,
Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill.

Milton.

This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations.

Wilkins.

The scouts to sev'ral parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore
The coasts.

Dryden.

To SCOUT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go out, in order to observe the motions of an enemy privately.

Of on the bordering deep
Encamp their legions; or with obscure wing
Scout far and wide into the realm of night,
Scorning surprize.

Milton.

As a hunted panther casts about Her glaring eyes, and pricks her list'ning ears to scout,

So she, to shun his toils, her cares employ'd.

Dryden.

Command a party out,
With a strict charge not to engage, but scout.

Dryden.

To SCOWL. v. n. [scylan, to squint, Sax. skeela sig, to look sour, Islandick.] To frown; to pout; to look angry, sour, or fullen.

Miso, her authority increased, came with scowling eyes to deliver a flattering good-morrow to the two ladies.

Sidney.

With bent lowering brows, as she would threaten,
She scowl'd and frown'd with froward countenance.

Fairy Queen.

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
Did scowl on Richard.

Shakspeare.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of this the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at.

Shakspeare.

The dusky clouds o'erspread
Heav'n's cheerful face; the low'ring element
Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape snow or show'r.

Milton.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away
With your dull influence; it is for you
To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow.

Crashaw.

In rueful gaze
The cattle stand, and on the scowling heav'n's
Cast a deploring eye.

Thomson.

SCOWL. n. s. [from the verb.] Look of fullness or discontent; gloom.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night;

When a ruddy storm, whose scowl
Made heav'n's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night,
To blot the newly-blossom'd light.

Crashaw.

SCOWL'INGLY. adv. [from scowl.] With a frowning and fullen look.

To SCRA'BLE. v. n. [krabbelen, scraffelen, to scrape or scratch, Dutch.] To paw with the hands.

The unow'd interest of proud swelling state.

Shakspeare.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearer's feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.

Milton.

It is not to be supposed, that, when such a tree was shaking, there would be no scrambling for the fruit.

Stillingfleet.

They must have scrambled with the wild beasts for crabs and nuts.

Ray.

2. To climb by the help of the hands: as, he scrambled up that rock.

SCRAMBLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Eager contest for something, in which one endeavours to get it before another.

As they were in the middle of their gambols, somebody threw a handful of apples among them,
that set them presently together by the ears upon the scramble.

L'Estrange.

Because the desire of money is constantly almost every where the same, its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble.

Locke.

2. Act of climbing by the help of the hands.

SCRAMBLER. n. s. [from scramble.]

1. One that scrambles.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him.

the etymology, nor any other example.]

Vile; worthless. Perhaps grating by the sound.

When they lift, their lean and flashy songs

Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw.

Milton.

SCRAP. n. s. [from scrape, a thing scraped or rubbed off.]

1. A small particle; a little piece; a fragment.

It is an unaccountable vanity to spend all our time raking into the scraps and imperfect remains of former ages, and neglecting the clearer notices of our own.

Glanville.

Trencher esquires spend their time in hopping from one great man's table to another's, only to pick up scraps and intelligence.

L'Estrange.

Languages are to be learned only by reading and talking, and not by scraps of authors got by heart.

Locke.

No rag, no scrap, of all the beau, or wit,

That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ.

Pope.

I can never have too many of your letters: I am angry at every scrap of paper lost.

Pope.

2. Crumb; small particles of meat left at the table.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court, is no contract.

Shakspeare.

The attendants puff a court up beyond her bounds,
for their own scraps and advantage.

Bacon.

On bones, on scraps of dogs let me be fed,

My limbs uncover'd, and expos'd my head

To bleakest colds.

Granville.

What has he else to bait his traps,

Or bring his vermin in, but scraps?

The offals of a church distress,

A hungry vicarage at best.

Swift.

3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrip.

Pregnant with thousands flits the serap unseen,
And silent sells a king, or buys a queen.

Pope.

SCRAP. v. a. [scrapian, Saxon;
schrapen, Dutch; safrôpitigh, Erse.]

1. To deprive of the surface by the light action of a sharp instrument, used with the edge almost perpendicular.

These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed.

Maxon.

2. To take away by scraping; to erase.

They shall destroy the walls, and I will scrape
her dust, and make her like the top of a rock.

Ezekiel.

Bread for a toast lay on the coals; and, if toasted quite through, scrape off the burnt side, and serve it up.

Swift.

3. To act upon any surface with a harsh noise.

The chiming clocks to dinner call;

A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall.

Pope.

4. To gather by great efforts, or penurious or trifling diligence.

Let the government be ruined by his avarice, if by avarice he can scrape together so much as to make his peace.

South.

Unhappy those who hunt for a party, and scrape together out of every author all those things only which favour their own tenets.

Watts.

TO SCRAPE. v. n.

1. To make a harsh noise.

2. To play ill on a fiddle.

3. To make an awkward bow.

Ainsw.

4. To SCRAPE Acquaintance. A low phrase. To curry favour, or insinuate into one's familiarity: probably from the scrapes or bows of a flatterer.

SCRAPE. n. s. [scrap, Swedish.]

1. Difficulty; perplexity; distress. This is a low word.

2. The sound of the foot drawn over the floor.

3. A bow.

SCRA'PER. n. s. [from scrape.]

1. Instrument with which any thing is scraped.

Never clean your shoes on the scraper, but in the entry, and the scraper will last the longer.

Swift.

2. A miser; a man intent on getting money; a scrape-penny.

Be thrifty, but not covetous; therefore give
Thy need, thine honour, and thy friend his due:
Never was scraper brave man. Get to live;

Then live, and use it; else it is not true

That thou hast gotten: surely, use alone

Makes money not a contemptible stone.

Herbert.

3. A vile fiddler.

Out! ye sempiternal scrappers.

Cowley.

Have wild boars or dolphins the least emotion at the most elaborate strains of your modern scrappers, all which have been tamed and humanized by ancient musicians?

Arbutnot.

SCRAT. n. s. [scritta, Saxon.] A herma-phrodite.

Skinner. Junius.

TO SCRATCH. v. a. [kratzen, Dutch.]

1. To tear or mark with slight incisions ragged and uneven.

The lab'ring swain

Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain,

And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again.

Dryden.

A sort of small sand-coloured stones, so hard as to scratch glass.

Grew.

2. To tear with the nails.

How can I tell but that his talons may

Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand?

Fairy Queen.

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,

To make my master out of love with thee.

I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

—Keep your ladyship still in that mind; so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratch face.

—Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere
such a face as yours were.

Shakspeare.

Scots are like witches: do but whet your pen,
Scratch till the blood come, they'll not hurt you then.

Cleveland.

To wish that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childish as to wish there were no fire in nature.

More.

Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face;

Let go, for shame.

Dryden.

3. To wound slightly.

4. To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.

Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood,

Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds.

Shakspeare.

5. To rub with the nails.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented to signify his name St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field.

Camden.

Other mechanical helps Aretæus uses to procure sleep, particularly the scratching of the temples and the ears.

Arbutnot.

Be mindful, when invention fails,

To scratch your head, and bite your nails.

Swift.

6. To write or draw awkwardly.

If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, style, or argument.

Swift.

SCRATCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An incision ragged and shallow.

The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep
scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the risings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer dents.

Maxon.

The smaller the particles of those substances
the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible.

Newton.

2. Laceration with the nails.

These nails with scratches shall deform my breast,
Left by my look or colour be express'd

The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd.

Prior.

3. A slight wound.

The valiant beast turning on her with open jaws,
she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zelmane, with a little scratch rather than a wound.

Sidney.

Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive

The prince of Wales from such a field as this.

Shakspeare.

SCRATCHER. n. s. [from scratch.] He
that scratches.

SCRATCHES. n. s. Cracked ulcers or scabs in a horse's foot.

when scratchingly the wheels about after a mouse.

Sidney.

SCRAW. n. s. [Irish and Erse.] Surface or scurf.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed, of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches.

Swift.

TO SCRAWL. v. a. [I suppose to be corrupted from scrabble.] To draw or mark
irregularly or clumsily.

Peruse my leaves through ev'ry part,

And think thou seest its owner's heart,

Scrawl'd o'er with trifles thus, and quite

As hard, as senseless, and as light.

Swift.

TO SCRAWL. v. n.

1. To write unskillfully and inelegantly.

I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favour in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it.
Shakspeare.

Then in the clemency of upward air
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder's fear.
Dryden.

5. [scorrere, Italian.] To range about, in order to catch or drive away something; to clear away.

The kings of Lacedemon having sent out some galleys, under the charge of one of their nephews, to scour the sea of the pirates, they met us. Sidney.

Divers are kept continually to scour these seas, infested greatly by pirates. Sandys.

If with thy guards thou scour'st the streets by night,
And dost in murders, rapes, and spoils delight,
Please not thyself the flatt'ring crowd to hear.
Dryden.

6. To pass swiftly over.

Sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left.
Milton.

Not half the number in their seats are found,
But men and steeds lie grov'ling on the ground;
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders scour the field,
The knights unhors'd.
Dryden.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labours, and the words move slow:
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.
Pope.

To SCOUR. v. n.

1. To perform the office of cleaning domestic utensils.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds. Shakspeare.

2. To clean.

Warm water is softer than cold; for it scouretb better.
Bacon.

3. To be purged or lax; to be diseased with looseness.

Some apothecaries, upon stamping colicquintida, have been put into a great scouring by the vapour only. Bacon.

Convulsion and scouring, they say, do often cause one another. Graunt.

If you turn sheep into wheat or rye to feed, let it not be too rank, lest it make them scour. Mortimer.

The enemy's drum is heard, and fearful scouring doth choak the air with dust. Shakspeare.

6. To run with great eagerness and swiftness; to scamper.

She from him fled with all her pow'r,
Who after her as hastily 'gan scour. Fairy Queen.

I saw men scour so on their way: I eyed them even to their ships. Shakspeare.

Word was brought him, in the middle of his schemes, that his house was robbed; and so away he scours to learn the truth. L'Estrange.

If they be men of fraud, they'll scour off themselves, and leave those that trust them to pay the reckoning. L'Estrange.

So four fierce couriers, starting to the race,
Scour through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threat'ning cries they fear,
But force along the trembling charioteer. Dryden.

As soon as any foreign object presses upon the sense, those spirits, which are posted upon the outguards, immediately take the alarm, and scour off to the brain, which is the head quarters. Collier.

Swift at her call her husband scour'd away
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.

SCOURER. n. s. [from scour.]

Famine and plague are sent as scourges for amendment. 2 Esdras.

3. One that afflicts, harasses, or destroys.

Thus Attila was called flagellum Dei.
Is this the scourge of France?

Is this the Talbot so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?

Such conquerors are not the favourites but scourges of God, the instruments of that vengeance. Atterbury.

In all these trials I have borne a part;
I was myself the scourge that caus'd the smart. Pope.

Immortal Jove!
Let kings no more with gentle mercy sway,
Or bless a people willing to obey;
But crush the nations with an iron rod,
And every monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. A whip for a top.

If they had a top, the scourge stick and leather strap should be left to their own making. Locke.

To SCOURGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lash with a whip; to whip.

The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scourge us. Shakspeare.

Is it lawful for you to scourge a Roman? Acts.

He scourg'd with many a stroke th' indignant waves. Milton.

When a professor of any religion is set up to be laughed at, this cannot help us to judge of the truth of his faith, any better than if he were scourged. Watts.

2. To punish; to chastise; to chasten; to castigate, with any punishment or affliction.

Seeing that thou hast been scourged from heaven, declare the mighty power of God. 2 Maccabees.

A hungry vicarage at best.

Swift.

3. A small piece of paper. This is properly scrip.

Pregnant with thousands flits the scrip unseen,
And silent sells a king, or buys a queen.

Pope.

To SCRAPE. v. a. [scneopan, Saxon;
schrapen, Dutch; safröcpitigh, Erse.]

1. To deprive of the surface by the light action of a sharp instrument, used with the edge almost perpendicular.

These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed.

Maxon.

2. To take away by scraping; to erase.

They shall destroy the walls, and I will scrape
her dust, and make her like the top of a rock.

Ezekiel.

Bread for a toast lay on the coals; and, if toasted quite through, scrape off the burnt side, and serve it up.

Swift.

3. To act upon any surface with a harsh noise.

The chiming clocks to dinner call;
A hundred footsteps scrape the marble hall.

Pope.

4. To gather by great efforts, or penurious or trifling diligence.

Let the government be ruined by his avarice, if
by avarice he can scrape together so much as to make his peace.

South.

Unhappy those who hunt for a party, and scrape
together out of every author all those things only which favour their own tenets.

Watts.

To SCRAPE. v. n.

1. To make a harsh noise.

2. To play ill on a fiddle.

3. To make an awkward bow.

Ainsw.

4. To SCRAPE Acquaintance. A low phrase. To curry favour, or insinuate into one's familiarity: probably from the scrapes or bows of a flatterer.

SCRAPE. n. f. [scrap, Swedish.]

1. Difficulty; perplexity; distress. This is a low word.

2. The sound of the foot drawn over the floor.

3. A bow.

SCRA'PER. n. f. [from scrape.]

1. Instrument with which any thing is scraped.

Never clean your shoes on the scraper, but in the entry, and the scraper will last the longer.

Swift.

2. A miser; a man intent on getting money; a scrape-penny.

Be thrifty, but not covetous; therefore give
Thy need, thine honour, and thy friend his due:
Never was scraper brave man. Get to live;
Then live, and use it; else it is not true
That thou hast gotten: surely, use alone
Makes money not a contemptible stone.

Herbert.

3. A vile fiddler.

Out! ye sempiternal scrapers.

Cowley.

Have wild boars or dolphins the least emotion at the most elaborate strains of your modern scrapers,
all which have been tamed and humanized by ancient musicians?

Arbutnot.

SCRAT. n. f. [scrutta, Saxon.] A herma-phrodite.

Skinner. Junius.

To SCRATCH. v. a. [kratzen, Dutch.]

1. To tear or mark with slight incisions ragged and uneven.

The lab'ring swain

Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain,
And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again.

Dryden.

A sort of small sand-coloured stones, so hard as to scratch glass.

Grew.

2. To tear with the nails.

How can I tell but that his talons may
Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand?

Fairy Queen.

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee.

I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a
man swear he loves me.

—Keep your ladyship still in that mind; so some gentleman or other shall scrape a predestinate scratch face.

—Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere
such a face as yours were.

Shakspeare.

Scots are like witches: do but whet your pen,
Scratch till the blood come, they'll not hurt you
then.

Cleaveland.

To wish that there were nothing but such dull
tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childish as to wish there were no fire in nature.

More.

Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face;
Let go, for shame.

Dryden.

3. To wound slightly.

4. To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.

Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds.

Shakspeare.

5. To rub with the nails.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented to signify his name St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field.

Camden.

Other mechanical helps Aretæus uses to procure sleep, particularly the scratching of the temples and
the ears.

Arbutnot.

Be mindful, when invention fails,

To scratch your head, and bite your nails.

Swift.

6. To write or draw awkwardly.

If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, style, or argument.

Swift.

SCRATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An incision ragged and shallow.

The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep
scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the risings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer dents.

Maxon.

The smaller the particles of those substances
the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and
therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches
and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible.

Newton.

2. Laceration with the nails.

These nails with scratches shall deform my breast,
Left by my look or colour be express'd
The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd.

Prior.

3. A slight wound.

The valiant beast turning on her with open jaws,
she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with his open paw to tear
off the mantle and sleeve of Zelmane, with a little scratch rather than a wound.

Sidney.

Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this.

Shakspeare.

SCRA'TCHER. n. f. [from scratch.] He
that scratches.

SCRA'TCHES. n. f. Cracked ulcers or scabs in a horse's foot.

Ainsw.

SCRA'TCHINGLY. adv. [from scratching.]
With the action of scratching.

Making him turn close to the ground, like a cat,
when scratchingly she wheels about after a mouse.

Sidney.

SCRAW. n. f. [Irish and Erse.] Surface or
scurf.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed, of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches.

Swift.

To SCRAWL. v. a. [I suppose to be corrupted from scrabble.] To draw or mark
irregularly or clumsily.

Peruse my leaves through ev'ry part,
And think thou seest its owner's heart,
Scrawl'd o'er with trifles thus, and quite
As hard, as senseless, and as light.

Swift.

To SCRAWL. v. n.

1. To write unskilfully and inelegantly.

Think not your verses sterling,
Though with a golden pen you scrawl,
And scribble in a berlin.

2. [from crawl.] To creep like a reptile.

SCRAWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Unskilful and inelegant writing.

The left hand will make such a scrawl, that it will not be legible.

Mr. Wycherly, hearing from me how welcome his letters would be, writ to you, in which I inserted my scrawl.

SCRAWLER. n. f. [from scrawl.] A clumsy and inelegant writer.

SCRAY. n. f. [hirundo marina.] A bird called a sea-swallow.

SCREABLE. adj. [scriabilis, Lat.] That may be spit out.

To SCREAM. v. n. [properly creak, or scriek, from skrige, Danish.] To make a shrill or loud noise.

To SCREAM. v. n. [hrieman, Saxon.]

1. To cry out shrilly, as in terror or agony.

Soon a whirlwind rose around,
And from afar he heard a screaming sound
As of a dame distress'd, who cried for aid,
And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky.

If chance a mouse creeps in her sight,
Can finely counterfeit a fright;
So sweetly screams, if it comes near her,
She ravishes all hearts to hear her.

2. To cry shrilly.

I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry.

SCREAM. n. f. [from the verb.] A shrill, quick, loud cry of terror or pain.

Our chimnies were blown down; and, as they say,
Lamentings heard i' the air, strange screams of death.

Then flash'd the livid lightning from her eyes,
And screams of horror rend th' affrighted skies.

To SCREECH. v. n. [skrækia, to cry, Islandick.]

1. To cry out as in terror or anguish.

Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirits.

2. To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.

SCREECH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cry of horror and anguish.

2. Harsh horrid cry.

The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
With hollow screeches fled from the dire repast;
And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scented blood,
And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood.

SCREE'CHOWL. n. f. [screech and owl.]

An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.

Deep night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screechowls cry, and bandogs howl.

Let him, that will a screechowl ay be call'd,
Go into Troy, and say there, Hector's dead.

By the screechowl's dismal note,
By the black night-raven's throat,
I charge thee, Hob.

Jupiter, though he had joggled the balance to weigh down Turnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him.

Sooner shall screechowls bask in sunny day,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love.

SCREEN. n. f. [escran, French.]

1. Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.

Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are.

Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy.

Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages.

My juniors by a year,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd, to stand between;
The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling.

2. Any thing used to exclude cold or light.

When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon one writeth.

One speaks the glory of the British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen.
Ladies make their old clothes into patchwork for screens and stools.

3. A riddle to sift sand.

To SCREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shelter; to conceal; to hide.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That screen'd the fruits of th' earth, and seats of men,
From cold septentrion blasts.

A good magistrate's retinue of state screens him from the dangers which he is to incur for the sake of it.

This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,
To screen the wild escapes of lawless passion.

2. [cerno, crevi, Lat.] To sift; to riddle.

Let the cases be filled with natural earth, taken the first half-spit, from just under the turf of the best pasture-ground, mixed with one part of very mellow soil screened.

SCREW. n. f. [scroewe, Dut. escron, Fr.]

One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female; the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former.

The screw is a kind of wedge, that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vectis at one end of it.

After your apples are ground, commit them to the screw press, which is the best.

To SCREW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To turn or move by a screw.

Some, when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,
Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse.

2. To fasten with a screw.

We fail!
But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail.

To screw your lock on the door, make wide holes, big enough to receive the shank of the screw.

3. To deform by contortions.

Sometimes a violent laughter screw'd his face,
And sometimes ready tears dropp'd down apace.

He screw'd his face into a harden'd smile,
And said, Sebastian knew to govern slaves.

With screw'd face, and doleful whine, they ply you with senseless harangues against human inventions on the one hand, and loud outcries for a further reformation on the other.

Let others screw their hypocritic face,
She shews her grief in a sincerer place.

4. To force; to bring by violence.

He resolv'd to govern by subaltern ministers, who screw'd up the pins of power too high.

No discourse can be, but they will try to turn the tide, and draw it all into their own channel; or they will screw in here and there some intimations of what they said or did.

The rents of land in Ireland, since they have been so enormously raised and screw'd up, may be computed to be about two millions.

5. To squeeze; to press.

6. To oppress by extortion.

Our country landlords, by unmeasurable screwing and racking their tenants, have already reduced the miserable people to a worse condition than the peasants in France.

SCREW Tree. n. f. [isora, Lat.] A plant of the East and West Indies.

To SCRIBBLE. v. a. [scribo, scribillo, Latin.]

1. To fill with artless or worthless writing.

How gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.

2. To write without use or elegance: as, he scribbled a pamphlet.

To SCRIBBLE. v. n. To write without care or beauty.

If a man should affirm, that an ape, casually meeting with pen, ink, and paper, and falling to scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would an atheist believe such a story? And yet he can easily digest things as incredible as that.

If *Mævi*us scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are who judge still worse than he can write.

Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators,
Whom, when they praise, the world believes no more Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er.

SCRIBBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Worthless writing.

By solemnly endeavouring to countenance my conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in a hasty scribble.

If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language.

SCRIBBLER. n. f. [from scribble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.

The most copious writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so much talking the tongue runs before the wit.

The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living.

The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to dine,

And to your genius must conform his line.

To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal flung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribblers.

Nobody was concerned or surpris'd, if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce.

SCRIBE. n. f. [scribe, Fr. scriba, Lat.]

1. A writer.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!

His love to Antony.

My master, being the scribe to himself, should write the letter.

We are not to wonder, if he thinks not fit to make any perfect and unerring scribes.

The following letter comes from some notable young female scriba.

2. A publick notary.

SCRIMER. n. f. [escrimeur, Fr.] A gladiator; a fencingmaster. Not in use.

The scrimers of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them.

SCRINE. n. f. [scrinium, Lat.] A place in which writings or curiosities are deposited.

Help then, O holy virgin,
Thy weaker novice to perform thy will;
Lay forth, out of thine everlasting serine,
The antique rolls which there lie hidden still.
Fairy Queen.

SCRIP. n. f. [skrappa, Islandick.]

1. A small bag; a satchel.

Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat;
though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.
Shakspeare.

He'd in requital ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.
Milton.

2. [from scriptio, Latin, as it seems.] A schedule; a small writing.

Call them man by man, according to the scrip.
Shakspeare.

Bills of exchange cannot pay our debts abroad,
till scrips of paper can be made current coin.
Locke.

SCRIPPAGE. n. f. [from scrip.] That which is contained in a scrip.
DiEt.

SCRIPTORY. adj. [scriptorius, Lat.] Written; not orally delivered.
Swift.

SCRIPTURAL. adj. [from scripture.] Contained in the Bible; biblical.

Creatures, the scriptural use of that word determines it sometimes to men.
Atterbury.

SCRIPTURE. n. f. [scriptura, Latin.]

1. Writing.

It is not only remembered in many scriptures,
but famous for the death and overthrow of Crassus.
Raleigh.

2. Sacred writing; the Bible.

With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scripture, which we account a thing most necessary.
Hooker.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose:
An evil soul producing holy witness
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek.
Shakspeare.

There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition, for it.
South.

Forbear any discourse of other spirits, till his reading the scripture history put him upon that enquiry.
Locke.

Scripture proof was never the talent of these men,
and 'tis no wonder they are foiled.
Atterbury.

Why are scripture maxims put upon us, without taking notice of scripture examples, that lie cross them?
Atterbury.

The Author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work shall not eat.
Secd.

SCRIVENER. n. f. [scrivano, Latin.]

1. One who draws contracts.

We'll pass the business privately and well:
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener.
Shakspeare.

2. One whose business is to place money at interest.

How happy in his low degree,
Who leads a quiet country life,
And from the griping scrivener free!
Dryden.

I am reduced to beg and borrow from scriveners and usurers, that suck the heart and blood.
Arbutnot.

SCROFULA. n. f. [from scrofa, Latin, a sow, as χοίρα.] A depravation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores, commonly called the king's-evil.

If matter in the milk dispose to coagulation, it produces a scrofula.
Wifeman.

SCROFULOUS. adj. [from scrofula.] Diseased with the scrofula.

Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished;
for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and mesentery.
Arbutnot.

English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition.
Arbutnot.

What would become of the race of men in the next age, if we had nothing to trust to, beside the scrofulous consumptive production furnished by our men of wit and pleasure?
Swift.

SCROLL. n. f. [supposed by Minsbew to be corrupted from roll; by Skinner derived from an escrouelle given by the heralds: whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is escrou.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls,
That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes.
Spenser.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.
Shakspeare.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Athens to play in our interlude.
Shakspeare.

A Numidian priest, bellowing out certain superstitious charms, cast divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he cursed and banned the christians.
Knolles.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremast man.
Bacon.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd;
Part good, part bad: of bad the longer scroll.
Milton.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my inmost soul.
Prior.

Yet, if he wills, may change or spoil the whole;
May take yon beauteous, mystick, itarry roll,
And burn it like an useless parchment scroll.
Prior.

SCROYLE. n. f. [This word I remember only in Shakspeare: it seems derived from escrouelle, French, a scrofulous swelling; as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.] A mean fellow; a rascal; a wretch.

The scroyles of Angiers flout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre.
King John.

To SCRUB. v. a. [scrubben, Dutch.] To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face.
Dryd.

She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes.
Arbutnot.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dext'rous airs,
Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs.
Swift.

SCRUB. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

2. Any thing mean or despicable.

With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd;
No little scrub joint shall come on my board.
Swift.

3. A worn-out broom.

SCRUBBED. } adj. [scrubbet, Danish.]
SCRUBBY. } Mean; vile; worthless;
dirty; sorry.

I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy, a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself.
Shakspeare.

The scrubbiest cur in all the pack
Can set the mastiff on your back.
Swift.

The scene a wood, produc'd no more Than a few scrubby trees before.
Swift.

SCRUFF. n. f. The same, I suppose, with scurf, by a metathesis usual in pronunciation.

SCRUPLE. n. f. [scrupule, French; scrupulus, Latin.]

1. Doubt; difficulty of determination; perplexity; generally about minute things.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To your good truth.
Shakspeare.

Nothing did more fill foreign nations with admiration of his succession, than the consent of all estates of England for the receiving of the king without the least scruple, pause, or question.
Bacon.

For the matter of your confession, let it be severe and serious; but yet so as it may be without any inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples, which only entangle the soul.
Taylor.

Men make no scruple to conclude, that those propositions, of whose knowledge they can find in themselves no original, were certainly the impress of God and nature upon their minds, and not taught them by any one else.
Locke.

2. Twenty grains; the third part of a dram.

Milk one ounce, oil of vitriol a scruple, doth coagulate the milk at the bottom, where the vitriol goeth.
Bacon.

3. Proverbially, any small quantity.

Nature ever lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence;
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor.
Shakspeare.

To SCRUPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To doubt; to hesitate.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge; not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charms.
Milton.

SCRUPLER. n. f. [from scruple.] A doubter; one who has scruples.

The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptized, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptized by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers.
Graunt.

SCRUPULOSITY. n. f. [from scrupulous.]

1. Doubt; minute and nice doubtfulness.

The one sort they warned to take heed, that scrupulosity did not make them rigorous in giving unadvised sentence against their brethren which were free; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous.
Hooker.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations.
South.

2. Fear of acting in any manner; tenderness of conscience.

The first sacrilege is looked on with horror; but when they have made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires.
Decay of Piety.

SCRUPULOUS. adj. [scrupuleux, French; scrupulosus, Latin; from scruple.]

1. Nicely doubtful; hard to satisfy in determinations of conscience.

They warned them, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous.
Hooker.

Some birds, inhabitants of the waters, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days.
Locke.

2. Given to objections; captious.

Equality of two domestick pow'rs
Breeds scrupulous faction.
Shakspeare.

3. Nice; doubtful.

As the cause of a war ought to be just, so the justice of that cause ought to be evident; not obscure, not scrupulous.
Bacon.

4. Careful; vigilant; cautious.

I have been the more scrupulous and wary, in regard the inferences from these observations are of importance.
Woodward.

SCRUPULOUSLY. adv. [from scrupulous.] Carefully; nicely; anxiously.

The duty consists not scrupulously in minutes and half hours.
Taylor.

Henry v. manifestly derived his courage from his piety, and was scrupulously careful not to ascribe the success of it to himself.
Addison.

SCRUPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from scrupulous.]
The state of being scrupulous.

SCRUTABLE. adj. [from scrutor, Latin.]
Discoverable by inquiry.
Shall we think God so scrutable, or ourselves so penetrating, that none of his secrets can escape us? Decay of Piety.

SCRUTATION. n. f. [from scrutor, Latin.]
Search; examination; inquiry. Dict.

SCRUTATOR. n. f. [from scrutator, French; from scrutor, Latin.] Inquirer; searcher; examiner.

SCRUTINOUS. adj. [from scrutiny.] Captious; full of inquiries. A word little used.
Age is froward, uneasy, scrutinous,
Hard to be pleas'd, and parsimonious. Denham.

SCRUTINY. n. f. [from scrutinium, Latin.]
Inquiry; search; examination with nicety.
In the scrutinies for righteousness and judgment, when it is inquired whether such a person be a good man or no, the meaning is not, what does he believe or hope, but what he loves. Taylor.
I thought thee worth my nearer view
And narrower scrutiny, that I might learn
In what degree or meaning thou art call'd
The Son of God. Milton.
They that have designed exactness and deep scrutiny, have taken some one part of nature. Hale.
Their difference to measure, and to reach,
Reason well rectified must nature teach;
And these high scrutinies are subjects fit
For man's all-searching and enquiring wit. Denham.
We are admonished of want of charity towards others, and want of a christian scrutiny and examination into ourselves. L'Estrange.
When any argument of great importance is managed with that warmth which a serious conviction of it generally inspires, somewhat may easily escape, even from a wary pen, which will not bear the test of a severe scrutiny. Atterbury.
These, coming not within the scrutiny of human senses, cannot be examined by them, or attested by any body. Locke.

SCRUTOIRE. n. f. [for scritoire, or escritoire.] A case of drawers for writings.
I locked up these papers in my scrutoire, and my scrutoire came to be unlocked. Prior.

TO SCRUIZE. v. a. [perhaps from scrui.]
This word, though now disused by writers, is still preserved, at least in its corruption, to scrui, in the London jargon.] To squeeze; to compress.
Though up he caught him 'twixt his puissant hands,
And having scrui'd out of his carrion corse
The loathful life, now loos'd from sinful bands,
Upon his shoulders carried him. Fairy Queen.

TO SCUD. v. n. [from scutture, Italian; skutta, Swedish; skiftur, swift, Islandick.] To fly; to run away with precipitation.
The vote was no sooner passed, but away they scudded to the next lake. L'Estrange.
The frighted satyrs, that in woods delight,
Now into plains with prick'd-up ears take flight;
And scudding thence, while they their horn-feet ply,
About their fires the little sylfuns cry. Dryden.
Away the frighted spectre scuds,
And leaves my lady in the fuds. Swift.

TO SCUDGLE. v. n. [from scud.] To run with a kind of affected haste or precipitation. A low word; commonly pronounced scuttle.

SCUFFLE. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from shuffle.] A confused quarrel; a tumultuous broil.
His captain's heart,
In the scuffles of great fights, hath burst
The buckles on his breast. Shakspeare.
Avowed atheists, placing themselves in the seat of the scorner, take much pleasing divertisement, by deriding our eager scuffles about that which they think nothing. Decay of Piety.
The dog leaps upon the serpent, and tears it to pieces; but in the scuffle the cradle happened to be overturned. L'Estrange.
Popish missionaries mix themselves in these dark scuffles, and animate the mob to such outrages and insults. Addison.

TO SCUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight confusedly and tumultuously.
I must confess I've seen, in former days,
The best knights in the world, and scuffled in some frays. Drayton.
A gallant man had rather fight to great disadvantages in the field, in an orderly way, than scuffle with an undisciplined rabble. King Charles.

TO SCULK. v. n. [from sculke, Danish.] To lurk in hiding places; to lie close.
It has struck on a sudden into such a reputation, that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly. Government of the Tongue.
Fearing to be seen, within a bed
Of coleworts he conceal'd his wily head;
There sculk'd till afternoon, and watch'd his time. Dryden.
My prophets and my sophists finish'd here
Their civil efforts of the verbal war:
Not so my rabbins and logicians yield;
Retiring still they combat; from the field
Of open arms unwilling they depart,
And sculk behind the subterfuge of art. Prior.
No news of Phyl! the bridegroom came,
And thought his bride had sculk'd for shame;
Because her father us'd to say
The girl had such a bashful way. Swift.

SCULKER. n. f. [from sculk.] A lurker; one that hides himself for shame or mischief.

SCULL. n. f. [It is derived by Skinner from shell, in some provinces called skull; as testa, and teste, or tete, signify the head. Lye observes, more satisfactorily, that skola is in Islandick the skull of an animal.]

1. The bone which incases and defends the brain; the arched bone of the head.
Fractures of the scull are at all times very dangerous, as the brain becomes affected from the pressure. Sharp.
2. A small boat; a cockboat. [See SCULLER.]
3. One who rows a cockboat.
Like caitiff vile, that for misdeed
Rides with his face to rump of steed;
Or rowing scull, he's fain to love,
Look one way and another move. Hudibras.
4. [recole, Saxon, an assembly.] In Milton's style, a shoal or vast multitude of fish.
Each bay
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in sculls that oft Bank the mid sea. Milton.

SCULLCAP. n. f. [from scull and cap.]

1. A headpiece.
2. A nightcap.

SCULLER. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skola is, in Islandick, a vessel; and escueille, in French, a dish.]

1. A cockboat; a boat in which there is but one rower.
Her soul already was consign'd to fate,
And shiv'ring in the leaky sculler fate. Dryden.
They hire the sculler, and, when once aboard,
Grow sick, and damn the climate like a lord. Pope.
2. One that rows a cockboat.

SCULLERY. n. f. [from skiola, a vessel, Islandick; or escueille, French, a dish.]
The place where common utensils, as kettles or dishes, are cleaned and kept.
Pyreicus was famous for counterfeiting base things, as pitchers, a scullery, and setting rogues together by the ears. Peacbam.

SCULLION. n. f. [from escueille, French, a dish.] The lowest domestick servant, that washes the kettles and the dishes in the kitchen.
I must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a-cursing like a very drab,
A scullion, fye upon 't! foh! about my brain. Shakspeare.
If the gentleman hath lain there, get the cook,
The stable-men, and the scullion, to stand in his way. Swift.

TO SCULP. v. a. [from sculpo, Latin; sculper, French.] To carve; to engrave. Not in use.
O that the tenor of my just complaint
Were sculpt with steel on rocks of adamant! Sandys.

SCULPTILE. adj. [from sculptilis, Latin.]
Made by carving.
In a silver medal is upon one side Moses horned, and on the reverse the commandment against sculptile images. Brown.

SCULPTOR. n. f. [from sculptor, Lat. sculpteur, French.] A carver; one who cuts wood or stone into images.
Thy shape's in ev'ry part
So clean, as might instruct the sculptor's art. Dryd.
The Latin poets give the epithets of trifidum and trifidum to the thunderbolt, from the sculptors and painters that lived before them, that had given it three forks. Addison.

SCULPTURE. n. f. [from sculptura, Latin; sculpture, French.]

1. The art of carving wood, or hewing stone, into images.
Then sculpture and her sister arts revive,
Stones leap'd to form, and rocks began to live. Pope.
2. Carved work.
Nor did there want Cornice or freeze with bossy sculptures graven. Milt.
There too, in living sculpture, might be seen
The mad affection of the Cretan queen. Dryden.
3. The art of engraving on copper.

TO SCULPTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To cut; to engrave.
Gold, silver, ivory vases sculptur'd high,
There are who have not. Pope.

SCUM. n. f. [from escume, French; schiuma, Italian; skum, Danish; schuym, Dutch.]

1. That which rises to the top of any liquor.
The rest had several offices assign'd;
Some to remove the scum as it did rise,
Others to bear the same away did mind,
And others it to use according to his kind. F. Queen.
The salt part of the water doth partly rise into a scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom. Bacon.
Gather'd like scum, and settled to itself,
Self-fed and self-consum'd. Milton.
Away, ye scum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils. Dryden.
They mix a med'cine, to foment their limbs,
With scum that on the molten silver swims. Dryden.
2. The dross; the refuse; the recrement; that part which is to be thrown away.

SCU

There flocked unto him all the scum of the Irish out of all places, that ere long he had a mighty army. Spenser.

Some forty gentlemen excepted, had we the very scum of the world, such as their friends thought it an exceeding good gain to be discharged of. Raleigh.

I told thee what would come
Of all thy vapouring, base scum. Hudibras.

The Scythian and Egyptian scum
Had almost ruin'd Rome. Roscommon.

You'll find, in these hereditary tales,
Your ancestors the scum of broken jails. Dryden.

The great and innocent are insulted by the scum
and refuse of the people. Addison.

To SCUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To clear off the scum: commonly written and spoken skim.

A second multitude
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion drofs. Milton.

Hear, ye sullen pow'rs below;
Hear, ye taskers of the dead!

You that boiling cauldrons blow,
You that scum the molten lead!

Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
What corns swim upon the top of the brine, scum
off. Mortimer.

SCUMBER. n. s. [from scum.] The dung of a fox. Ainsworth.

SCUMMER. n. s. [escumoir, French.] A vessel with which liquor is scummed:
commonly called a skimmer.

SCUPPER HOLES. n. s. [schoepen, Dutch, to draw off.] In a ship, small holes on the deck, through which water is carried into the sea. The leathers over those holes are called scupper leathers; and the nails with which they are fastened, scupper nails. Bailey.

The blood at scupper holes run out. Ward.

SCURF. n. s. [scurf, Saxon; skarfa, Islandick; skurff, Danish; skorf, Swedish;
schorft, Dutch.]

1. A kind of dry miliary scab.

Her crafty head was altogether bald,
And, as in hate of honourable eld,
Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald. Fairy Queen.

The virtue of his hands
Was lost among Pactolus' sands,
Against whose torrent while he swims,
The golden scurf peels off his limbs. Swift.

2. A foil or stain adherent.

Then are they happy, when by length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime,
No speck is left. Dryden.

3. Any thing sticking on the surface.

There stood a hill, whose grisly top Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

Upon throwing in a stone, the water boils; and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

SCURFINENESS. n. s. [from scurf.] The state of being scurfy.

SCURRIL. adj. [scurrilis, Latin.] Low; mean; grossly opprobrious; lewdly jocose.

With him Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed, the live-long day
Breaks scurril jests. Shakspeare.

Nothing conduces more to letters than to examine the writings of the ancients, provided the plagues of judging and pronouncing against them be away;
such as envy, bitterness, precipitation, impudence, and scurril scoffing. Ben Jonson.

Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,
Than all thy foul unmanner'd scurril taunts. Dryd.

SCURRILITY. n. s. [scurrilité, French;
scurrilitas, Lat.] Grossness of reproach;
lewdness of jocularity; mean buffoonery.

Good master Holofernes, purge; so it shall please you to abrogate scurrility. Shakspeare.

Banish scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets. Dryden.

SCU

SCURRILOUS. adj. [scurrilis, Latin.]

Grossly opprobrious; using such language as only the licence of a buffoon can warrant; lewdly jocular; vile; low.

Scurrilous and more than satirical immodesty. Hooker.

Let him approach singing. Forewarn him that he use no scurrilous words in 's tunes. Shakspeare.

How often is a person, whose intentions are to do good by the works he publishes, treated in as scurri- lous a manner as if he were an enemy to mankind? Addison.

Their characters have been often treated with the utmost barbarity and injustice by scurrilous and enraged orators. Swift.

SCURRILOUSLY. adv. [from scurrilous.]

With gross reproach; with low buffoonery; with lewd merriment.

Such men there are, who have written scurrilously against me, without any provocation. Dryden.

It is barbarous incivility, scurrilously to sport with that which others count religion. Tillotson.

SCURRILOUSNESS. n. s. [from scurrilous.]

Scurrility; baseness of manners.

SCURVILY. adv. [from scurvy.] Vilely; basely; coarsely. It is seldom used but in a ludicrous sense.

Look i' your glass now,
And see how scurvily that countenance shews;
You would be loth to own it. Ben Jonson.

This alters the whole complexion of an action, that would otherwise look but very scurvily, and makes it perfect. South.

The clergy were never more learned, or so scurvily treated. Swift.

SCURVY. n. s. [from scurf. This word was, I believe, originally an adjective.]

A distemper of the inhabitants of cold countries, and amongst those such as inhabit marshy, fat, low, moist soils, near stagnating water, fresh or salt; invading chiefly in the winter such as are sedentary, or live upon salted or smoaked flesh and fish, or quantities of unfermented farinaceous vegetables, and drink bad water. Arbuthnot.

SCURVY. adj. [from scurf, scurfy, scurvy.]

1. Scabbed; covered with scabs; diseased with the scurfy.

Whatsoever man be scurvy or scabbed. Leviticus.

2. Vile; bad; sorry; worthless; contemptible; offensive.

I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler. Shakspeare.

This is a very scurvy tune to sing to a man's funeral. Shakspeare.

He spoke scurvy and provoking terms
Against your honour. Shakspeare.

A crane, which is but scurvy meat, lays but two eggs. Cheyne.

It would be convenient to prevent the excess of drink, with that scurvy custom of taking tobacco. Swift.

SCURVYGRASS. n. s. [scurvy and grass;
cochlearia, Latin.] The plant spoonwort.

SCU'SES, for excuses.

I shifted him away,
And laid good scuses on your ecstasy. Shakspeare.

SCUT. n. s. [skott, Islandick.] The tail of those animals whose tails are very short,
as a hare.

In the hare it is averfely seated, and in its distension inclines unto the cocxix or scut. Brown.

He fled to earth, but first it cost him dear;
He left his scut behind, and half an ear. Swift.

SCUTCHEON. n. s. [scuccion, Italian, from scutum, Lat.] The shield represented in heraldry; the ensigns armorial of a family. See ESCUTCHEON.

SEA

And thereto had she that scutcheon of her desires supported by certain badly diligent ministers. Sidney.

Your scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Shakspeare.

Honour is a meer scutcheon. Shakspeare.

The chiefs about their necks the scutcheons wore,
With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryden.

SCUTELLATED. adj. [scutella, Latin.]

Divided into small surfaces.

It seems part of the scutellated bone of a sturgeon,
being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution. Woodward.

SCUTIFORM. adj. [scutiformis, Latin.]

Shaped like a shield.

SCUTTLE. n. s. [scutella, Latin; scutell, Celtick. Ainsworth.]

1. A wide shallow basket, so named from a dish or platter which it resembles in form.

A scuttle or skrein to rid soil fro' the corn. Tusser.

The earth and stones they are fain to carry from under their feet in scuttles and baskets. Hakerwill.

2. A small grate.

To the hole in the door have a small scuttle, to keep in what mice are there. Mortimer.

3. [from scud.] A quick pace; a short run; a pace of affected precipitation.

This is properly scuddle.

She went with an easy scuttle out of the shop. Spectator.

To SCUTTLE. v. n. [from scud or scuddle.]

To run with affected precipitation.

The old fellow scuttled out of the room. Arbuth.

To SDEIGN. v. a. [Spenser. Sdegnare, Italian; Milton, for disdain.]

Lifted up so high,
I sdeign'd subjection. Milton.

SDEIGNFUL. adj. [Contracted for dis- dainful.]

They now, puffed up with sdeignful insolence,
Despise the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

SEA. n. s. [ræ, Sax. see, or zee, Dutch.]

1. The ocean; the water, opposed to the land.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather Thy multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. Shakspeare.

The rivers run into the sea. Cicero.

He made the sea and all that is therein. Exodus.

So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air
So working seas settle and purge the wine. Davies.

Amphibious, between sea and land,
The river horse. Milton.

Some leviathan,
Haply slumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island, oft as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton.

Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land. Woodward.

They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail. Arbuthnot.

Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,
Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore. Dryden.

But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest and the rising waves,
Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid sides
Wash off the sea weeds, and the founding tides. Dryden.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is,
without a great loss to the world. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
While Argo saw her kindred trees
Descend from Pelion to the main. Pope.

2. A collection of water; a lake.

By the sea of Galilee. Matthew.

3. Proverbially for any large quantity.

That sea of blood, which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and instigator of its effusion. King Charles.

SEA

4. Any thing rough and tempestuous.

To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,

And in a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton.

5. Half SEAS over. Half drunk.

The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip: our friend the alderman was half seas over before the bonfire was out. Speclator.

SEA is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.

SE'ABAR. n. f. [from sea and bar; hirundo piscis, Latin.] The sea swallow.

SE'ABEAT. adj. [from sea and beat.] Dashed by the waves of the sea.

The sovereign of the seas he blames in vain,
That one seabeat will to sea again. Spenser.
Darkness cover'd o'er

The face of things: along the seabeat shore
Satiated we slept. Pope.

SEA'BOAT. n. f. [from sea and boat.] Vessel capable to bear the sea.

Shipwrecks were occasioned by their ships being bad seaboats, and themselves but indifferent seamen. Arbutnot.

SE'ABORN. adj. [from sea and born.] Born of the sea; produced by the sea.

Like Neptune and his seaborne niece, shall be
The shining glories of the land and sea. Waller.

All these in order march, and marching sing
The warlike actions of their seaborne king. Dryden.

SE'ABOY. n. f. [from sea and boy.] Boy employed on shipboard.

Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose
To the wet seaby in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and the stillest night
Deny it to a king? Shakspeare.

SE'ABREACH. n. f. [from sea and breach.] Irruption of the sea by breaking the banks.

To an impetuous woman, tempests and seabreaches are nothing. L'Estrange.

SE'ABREEZE. n. f. [from sea and breeze.] Wind blowing from the sea.

Hedges, in most places, would be of great advantage to shelter the grafts from the seabreeze. Mortimer.

SE'ABUILT. adj. [from sea and built.] Built for the sea.

Borne each by other in a distant line,
The seabuilt forts in dreadful order move. Dryden.

SEACABBAGE. n. f. [from crambe, Latin.] Sea colewort. A plant.

It hath fleshy leaves like those of the cabbage. Miller.

SE'ACALF. n. f. [from sea and calf; phoca.] The seal.

The seacalf, or seal, is so called from the noise he makes like a calf; his head comparatively not big, shaped rather like an otter's, with teeth like a dog's, and mustaches like those of a cat; his body long, and all over hairy: his forefeet, with fingers clawed, but not divided, yet fit for going: his hinder feet, more properly fins, and fitter for swimming, as being an amphibious animal. The female gives suck, as the porpoise, and other viviparous fishes. Grew.

SE'ACAP. n. f. [from sea and cap.] Cap made to be worn on shipboard.

I know your father well,
Though now you have no seacap on your head. Shakspeare.

SE'ACARP. n. f. [from sea and carp; turdus marinus, Latin.] A spotted fish that lives among stones and rocks.

SE'ACHART. n. f. [from sea and chart.] Map on which only the coasts are delineated.

The situation of the parts of the earth are better learned by a map or seachart, than reading the description. Watts.

SE'ACOAL. n. f. [from sea and coal.] Coal so called, not because found in the sea, but because brought to London by sea; pit-coal.

We'll have a posset soon at the latter end of a seacoal fire. Shakspeare.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal. Bacon.

This pulmonique indisposition of the air is very much heightened, where a great quantity of seacoal is burnt. Harvey.

SE'ACOAST. n. f. [from sea and coast.] Shore; edge of the sea.

The venturesome mariner that way,
Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay;
For safety's sake that same his seamar made,
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen.

Upon the seacoast are many parcels of land, that would pay well for the taking in. Mortimer.

SE'ACOB. n. f. [from gavia, Latin.] A bird, called also seagull.

SE'ACOMPASS. n. f. [from sea and compass.] The card and needle of mariners.

The needle in the seacompass still moving but to the north point only, with moveor immotus, notified the respective constancy of the gentleman to one only. Camden.

SE'ACOOT. n. f. [from sea and coot; fulica marina, Latin.] A seafowl like the moorhen.

SE'ACORMORANT, or Seadrake. n. f. [from sea and cormorant; corvus marinus, Latin.] A seacrow.

SE'ACOW. n. f. [from sea and cow.] The manatee.

The seacow is of the cetaceous kind. It grows to fifteen feet long, and to seven or eight in circumference; its head is like that of a hog, but longer, and more cylindrick: its eyes are small, and it has no external ears, but only two little apertures. Its lips are thick, and it has two long tusks standing out. It has two fins, which stand forward on the breast like hands, whence the Spaniards called it manatee. The female has two round breasts placed between the pectoral fins. The skin is very thick and hard, and not scaly, but hairy. Hill.

SE'ADOG. n. f. [from sea and dog.] Perhaps the shark.

Fierce seadogs devour the mangled friends. Ros.
When, stung with hunger, she embroils the flood,
The seadog and the dolphin are her food. Pope.

SE'AEAR. n. f. [from sea and ear; auris marina, Latin.] A sea plant.

SE'AFARER. n. f. [from sea and fare.] A traveller by sea; a mariner.

They stiffly refused to vail their bonnets by the summons of those towns, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by the better enabled seafarers. Carew.

A wand'ring merchant, he frequents the main,
Some mean seafarer in pursuit of gain;
Studious of freight, in naval trade well skill'd,
But dreads th' athletic labours of the field. Pope.

SE'AFARING. adj. [from sea and fare.] Travelling by sea.

My wife fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as seafaring men provide for storms. Shakspeare.
It was death to divert the ships of seafaring people, against their will, to other uses than they were appointed. Arbutnot.

SE'AFENNEL. The same with SAMPHIRE.

SE'AFIGHT. n. f. [from sea and fight.] Battle of ships; battle on the sea.

Seafights have been often fatal to the war; but this is when princes set up their rest upon the battles. Bacon.

If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, we should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep than in the middle of a seafight. Locke.

This fleet they recruited with two hundred sail, whereof they lost ninety-three in a seafight. Arbutnot.

SEA

SE'AFOWL. n. f. [from sea and fowl.] Birds that live at sea.

The bills of curlews, and many other seafowl, are very long, to enable them to hunt for the worms. Derham.

A seafowl properly represents the passage of a deity over the seas. Broome.

A length of ocean and unbounded sky,
Which scarce the seafowl in a year o'er-fly. Pope.

SE'AGIRDLES. n. f. pl. [from fungus phasganoides, Latin.] A sort of sea mushrooms.

SE'AGIRT. adj. [from sea and girt.] Girded or encircled by the sea.

Neptune, besides the sway
Of every salt flood and each ebbing stream,
Took in by lot, 'twixt high and nether Jove, Imperial rule of all the seagirt isles. Milton.

Telemachus, the blooming heir,
Of seagirt Ithaca, demands my care:
'Tis mine to form his green unpractis'd years
In sage debates. Pope.

SE'AGRASS. n. f. [from sea and grass; alga, Latin.] An herb growing on the seashore.

SE'AGREEN. adj. [from sea and green.] Resembling the colour of the distant sea; cerulean.

White, red, yellow, blue, with their several mixtures, as green, scarlet, purple, and seagreen, come in by the eyes. Locke.

Upon his urn reclin'd,
His seagreen mantle waving in the wind,
The god appear'd. Pope.

SE'AGREEN. n. f. Saxifrage. A plant.

SE'AGULL. n. f. [from sea and gull.] A waterfowl.

Seagulls, when they flock together from the sea towards the shores, forebode rain and wind. Bacon.
Bitterns, herons, and seagulls, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer.

Seamen, through dismal storms, are wont
To pass the oyster-breeding Hellespont.
Evelyn.

Æneas order'd
A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
A soldier's falchion, and a seaman's oar;
Thus was his friend interr'd.
Dryden.

By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will refuse no opportunity of rendering yourself useful.
Dryden.

Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the greatest fleet, and the most seamen, of any state in Europe.
Addison.

2. Merman; the male of the mermaid.
Seals live at land and at sea, and porpuses have the warm blood and entrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids or seamen.
Locke.

SEAMARK. n. f. [sea and mark.] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.
Those white rocks,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay,
Threat'ning unheedy wreck and rash decay,
He for his safety's sake his seamark made,
And nam'd it Albion.
Fairy Queen.

Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seamark of my utmost sail.
Shakespeare.

They were executed at divers places upon the sea-coast, for seamarks, or light-houses, to teach Perkins's people to avoid the coast.
Bacon.

They are remembered with a brand of infamy fixt upon them, and set as seamarks for those who observe them to avoid.
Dryden.

The fault of others sway
He set as seamarks for himself to shun.
Dryden.

But foaming billows breaking on the ground.
Dryd.

Fournier gives an account of an earthquake in Peru, that reached three hundred leagues along the seashore.
Burnet.

To say a man has a clear idea of any quantity, without knowing how great it is, is as reasonable as to say he has the positive idea of the number of the fands on the seashore.
Locke.

SEASICK. adj. [sea and sick.] Sick, as new voyagers on the sea.
She began to be much seasick, extremity of seel, Danish.] The seacalf.

The seal or foyle is in make and growth not unlike a pig, ugly faced, and footed like a moldwarp; he delighteth in music, or any loud noise, and thereby is trained to shew himself above water: they also come on land.
Carew.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orcks, and seamews clang.
Milton.

SEAL. n. f. [sigel, Saxon; sigillum, Lat.]
1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.
The king commands you
To render up the great seal.
Shakespeare.

If the organs of perception, like wax overhardened with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal;
or, like wax of a temper too soft, will not hold it;
or else supposing the wax of a temper fit, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression: in any of these cases the print left by the seal will be obscure.
Locke.

The same his grandfire wore about his neck
In three seal rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown.
Pope.

2. The impression made in wax.
Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud.
Shakespeare.

Solyman shewed him his own letters, asking him paper, fold it, write upon 't, and afterwards seal it.

Shakespeare.

2. To confirm or attest by a seal.
God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both.
Shaksp.

3. To confirm; to ratify; to settle.
My soul is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seal our true hearts love.
Shakespeare.

When I have performed this, and sealed to them
this fruit, I will come into Spain.
Romans.

4. To shut; to close: with up.
Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum!
Shakespeare.

At my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation.
Shakespeare.

The sense is like the sun; for the sun seals up the globe of heaven, and opens the globe of earth: so the sense doth obscure heavenly things, and reveals earthly things.
Bacon.

5. To make fast.
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,
And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn
The facil gates of hell too slightly barr'd.
Milton.

6. To mark with a stamp.
You'd rail upon the hostess,
And say you would present her at the leet,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts.
Shakespeare.

3. To qualify by admixture of another ingredient.

Mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is an attribute to god himself;
And earthly pow'r does then shew likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice. Shakspeare.

Season your admiration but a while
With an attentive ear, till I deliver
This marvel to you. Shakspeare.

4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.

Whatever thing
The scythe of time mows down, devour unpar'd,
Till I, in man residing, through the race
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect,
And season him thy last and sweetest prey. Milton.

Secure their religion, season their younger years with prudent and pious principles. Taylor.

Sin, taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons; the touch and tincture go together. South.

5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature.

The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When ev'ry goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren;
How many things by season season'd are
To their right praise and true perfection! Shakspeare.

Who in want a hollow friend doth try Directly seasons him his enemy. Shakspeare.

We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself unto a power tyrannical. Shakspeare.

And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;
When, lo, a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train. Dryden.

2. Chair of state; throne; post of authority; tribunal.

With due observance of thy goodly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall supply Thy latest words. Shakspeare.

Thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares, fears. Shakspeare.

Whatsoever be the manner of the world's end, most certain it is an end it shall have, and as certain that then we shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive according to that which he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil. Hakewill.

3. Mansion; residence; dwelling; abode.

It were enough in reason to succour with victuals, and other helps, a vast multitude, compelled by necessity to seek a new seat, or to direct them unto a country able to receive them. Raleigh.

O earth, how like to heav'n? if not preferr'd
Most justly, seat worthier of gods, as built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton.

In Alba he shall fix his royal seat;
And, born a king, a race of kings beget. Dryden.

Has winter caus'd thee, friend, to change thy seat,
And seek in Sabine air a warm retreat? Dryden.

The promis'd seat of empire shall again
Cover the mountain, and command the plain. Prior.

4. Situation; site.

It followeth now that we find out the seat of Eden; for in it was Paradise by God planted. Raleigh.

A church by Strand-bridge, and two bishops houses, were pulled down to make a seat for his new building. Hayward.

He that builds a fair house upon an ill seat, committeth himself to prison. Bacon.

The fittest and the easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war,
The rather for their seat, being next borderers
On Italy. Ben Jonson.

To SEAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place on seats; to cause to sit down.

The guests were no sooner seated but they entered into a warm debate. Arbutnot.

2. To place in a post of authority, or place of distinction.

Thus high was king Richard seated. Shakspeare.
Not Babylon,

Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence
Equall'd in all their glories, to inshrine
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat
Their kings. Milton.

A spirit of envy or opposition makes mankind uneasy to see others of the same species seated above them in a sort of perfection. Pope.

3. To fix in any particular place or situation; to settle.

Should one family or one thousand hold possession of all the southern undiscovered continent, because they had seated themselves in Nova Guiana? Raleigh.

By no means build too near a great neighbour, which were, in truth, to be as unfortunately seated on the earth as Mercury is in the heavens; for the most part ever in combustion, or obscurity, under brighter beams than his own. Wotton.

4. To fix; to place firm.

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Shakspeare.

From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the seated hills. Milton.

SE'AWARD. adv. [sea and peapb, Saxon.] Toward the sea.

The rock rush'd seaward with impetuous roar,
Ingulf'd, and to th' abyss the boaster bore. Pope.

To SECE'RN. v. a. [secerno, Lat.] To separate finer from grosser matter; to make the separation of substances in the body.

Birds are better meat than beasts, because their flesh doth assimilate more finely, and secerneth more subtly. Bacon.

The pituite or mucus secerned in the nose and windpipe, is not an excrementitious but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts, from which it is secerned, from excoriations. Arbutnot.

SECE'SSION. n. s. [secessio, Latin.]

1. The act of departing.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from, the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibrium of either hemisphere. Brown.

2. The act of withdrawing from councils or actions.

SE'CLE. n. s. [secle, Fr. seculum, Latin.] A century. Not in use.

Of a man's age, part he lives in his father's lifetime, and part after his son's birth; and thereupon it is wont to be said that three generations make one secle, or hundred years, in the genealogies. Hammond.

To SECLU'DE. v. a. [secludo, Lat.] To confine from; to shut up apart; to exclude.

None is secluded from that function, of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.

Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us; to fence them not only, as he did the interdicted tree, by combination, but with difficulties and impossibilities. Decay of Piety.

The number of birds described may be near five hundred, and of fishes, secluding shell-fish, as many;
but, if the shell-fish be taken in, more than six times
the number. R. y.

Inclose your tender plants in your conservatory, secluding all entrance of cold. Evelyn.

Let eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom slaves. Thomson.

SE'COND. adj. [second, Fr. secundus, Lat.] It is observable, that the English have no ordinal of two; as the Latins, and the nations deriving from them, have none of duo. What the Latins call secundus, from sequor, the Saxons term oðen, or æftera.]

1. The next in order to the first; the ordinal of two.

Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back. Dryden.

2. Next in value or dignity; inferior.

I shall not speak superlatively of them, lest I be suspected of partiality; but this I may truly say, they are second to none in the christian world.

Bacon.

None I know

Second to me, or like; equal much less. Milton.

My eyes are still the same; each glance, each grace,

Keep their first lustre, and maintain their place,
Not second yet to any other face. Dryden.

Not these huge bolts, by which the giants slain
Lay overthrown on the Phlegrean plain;
'Twas of a lesser mould and lighter weight;
They call it thunder of a second rate. Addison.

By a sad train of miseries alone

Distinguish'd long, and second now to none. Pope.

Persons of second rate merit in their own country, like birds of passage, thrive here, and fly off when their employments are at an end. Swift.

SE'COND-HAND. n. f. Possession received from the first possessor.

SE'COND-HAND is sometimes used adjectively. Not original; not primary.

Some men build so much upon authorities, they have but a second-hand or implicit knowledge.

Locke.

They are too proud to cringe to second-hand favourites in a great family. Swift to Gay.

At SE'COND-HAND. adv. In imitation; in the second place of order; by transmission; not primarily; not originally.

They pelted them with satires and epigrams, which perhaps had been taken up at first only to make their court, and at second-hand to flatter those who had flattered their king. Temple.

In imitation of preachers at second-hand, I shall transcribe from Bruyere a piece of raillery. Tatler.

Spurious virtue in a maid;

A virtue but at second-hand. Swift.

SE'COND. n. f. [second, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. One who accompanies another in a duel, to direct or defend him.

Their seconds minister on oath,
Which was indifferent to them both,
That on their knightly faith and troth
No magick them supplied;

And fought them that they had no charms,
Wherewith to work each other's harms,
But came with simple open arms
To have their causes tried. Drayton.

Their first encounters were very furious, till after some toil and bloodshed they were parted by the seconds. Addison.

Personal brawls come in as seconds to finish the dispute of opinion. Watts.

2. One who supports or maintains; a supporter; a maintainer.

He propounded the duke as a main cause of divers infirmities in the state, being sure enough of seconds
after the first onset. Wotton.

Courage, when it is only a second to injustice, and falls on without provocation, is a disadvantage to a character. Collier.

3. A SECOND Minute, the second division of an hour by sixty; the sixtieth part of a minute.

Four flames of an equal magnitude will be kept alive the space of sixteen second minutes, though one of these flames alone, in the same vessel, will not last above twenty-five or at most thirty seconds.

Wilkins.

Sounds move above 1140 English feet in a second minute of time, and in seven or eight minutes of time about 100 English miles. Locke.

To SE'COND. v. a. [seconder, Fr. secundo,
Lat. from the noun.]

1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.

The authors of the former opinion were presently seconded by other wittier and better learned, who being loth that the form of church polity, which they fought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity and matters of necessity to salvation. Hooker.

Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shakspeare.

I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offering to combat thee, his champion bold,
With th' utmost of his godhead seconded. Milton.

Familiar Ovid tender thoughts inspires,
And nature seconds all his soft desires. Roscommon.
If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.

In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce,
Yet serves to second too some other use. Pope.

2. To follow in the next place.

You some permit
To second ill with ill. Shakspeare.
Having formerly discoursed of a maritimal voyage,
I think it not impertinent to second the same with some necessary relations concerning the royal navy. Raleigh.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton.

Sin is seconded with sin; and a man seldom commits one sin to please, but he commits another to defend himself. South.

SE'COND Sight. n. f. The power of seeing things future, or things distant: supposed inherent in some of the Scottish islanders.

As he was going out to steal a sheep, he was seized with a fit of second sight: the face of the country presented him with a wide prospect of new scenes, which he had never seen before. Addison.

SE'COND fought. adj. [from second fight.]
Having the second fight.

Sawney was descended of an ancient family, renowned for their skill in prognosticks: most of his ancestors were second fought, and his mother but narrowly escaped for a witch. Addison.

SE'CONDARILY. adv. [from secondary.]
In the second degree; in the second order; not primarily; not originally;
not in the first intention.

These atoms make the wind primarily tend downwards, though other accidental causes impel it se- condarily to a sloping motion. Digby.

He confesses that temples are erected, and festivals kept, to the honour of saints, at least secon- darily. Stillingfleet.

It is primarily generated out of the effusion of melancholick blood, or secondarily out of the dregs and remainder of a phlegmonous or oedematick tumour. Harvey.

SE'CONDARINESS. n. f. [from secondary.]
The state of being secondary.

That which is peculiar and discriminative must be taken from the primariness and secondariness of the perception. Norris.

SE'CONDARY. adj. [secundarius, Lat.]

1. Not primary; not of the first intention.

Two are the radical differences: the secondary differences are as four. Bacon.

2. Succeeding to the first; subordinate.

Wheresoever there is moral right on the one hand, no secondary right can discharge it. L'Estrange.

Gravitation is the powerful cement which holds together this magnificent structure of the world, which stretcheth the north over the empty space, and hangeth the earth upon nothing, to transfer the words of Job from the first and real cause to the secondary. Bentley.

3. Not of the first order or rate.

If the system had been fortuitously formed by the convening matter of a chaos, how is it conceivable that all the planets, both primary and se- condary, should revolve the same way, from the west to the east, and that in the same plane? Bentley.

4. Acting by transmission or deputation.

That we were form'd then, say'st thou, and the work

Of secondary hands, by task transferr'd
From father to his son? Milton.

As in a watch's fine machine,
Though many artful springs are seen,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary pow'r
From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

5. A secondary fever is that which arises after a crisis, or the discharge of some morbid matter, as after the declension of the smallpox or measles. Quincy.

SE'CONDARY. n. f. [from the adjective.]

A delegate; a deputy.

SE'CONDLY. adv. [from second.] In the second place.

First, she hath disobeyed the law; and secondly, trespassed against her husband. Ecclesiasticus.

First, metals are more durable than plants; and secondly, they are more solid and hard. Bacon.

The house of commons in Ireland, and secondly, the privy council, addressed his majesty against these half-pence. Swift.

They call it thunder of the second-rate. Addison.

2. [It is sometimes used adjectively.] Of the second order: a colloquial licence.

He was not then a second-rate champion, as they would have him, who think fortitude the first virtue in a hero. Dryden.

SE'CRECY. n. f. [from secret.]

1. Privacy; state of being hidden; concealment.

That's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy. Shakspeare.

The lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen. Shakspeare.

In Nature's book of infinite secrecy
A little can I read. Shakspeare.

2. Solitude; retirement; not exposure to view.

Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,
Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication. Milton.

There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetration of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and put out the great light within him, his conscience; he must get away from himself, and shake off the thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone. South.

3. Forbearance of discovery.

It is not with publick as with private prayer: in this rather secrecy is commanded than outward shew; whereas that, being the public act of a whole society, requireth accordingly more care to be had of external appearance. Hooker.

4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity invio-late; close silence.

For secrecy no lady closer. Shakspeare.

Secrecy and fidelity were their only qualities. Burnet.

SE'CRET. adj. [secret, Fr. secretus, Lat.]

1. Kept hidden; not revealed; concealed;

The secret things belong unto the Lord our God;
but those things which are revealed belong unto us.

Deuteronomy.

Be this, or aught
Than this more secret, now design'd, I haste
To know. Milton.

2. Retired; private; unseen.

Thou open'st wisdom's way,
And giv'st access, though secret she retire?
And I perhaps am secret. Milton.
There secret in her sapphire cell
He with the Nais wont to dwell. Fenton.

3. Faithful to a secret entrusted.
Secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter. Shakspeare.

4. Private; affording privacy.
The secret top
Of Oreb or of Sinai. Milton.

5. Occult; not apparent.
Or sympathy, or some connatural force
Pow'rful at greatest distance to unite
With secret amity things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Milton.
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet. Milton.

6. Privy; obscene.
SE'CRET. n. f. [secret, Fr. secretum, Lat.]

They have a similitude or contrariety to the secretitious humours in taste and quality. Floyer.

SE'CRETIST. n. f. [from secret.] A dealer in secrets.
Some things I have not yet thought fit so plainly to reveal; not out of any envious design of having them buried with me, but that I may barter with those secretists, that will not part with one secret but in exchange for another. Boyle.

SE'CRETLY. adv. [from secret.]

1. Privately; privily; not openly; not publicly; with invention not to be known.

Give him this letter, do it secretly. Shakspeare.
Now secretly with inward grief he pin'd;
Now warm resentments to his griefs he join'd. Addison.

Some may place their chief satisfaction in giving secretly what is to be distributed; others, in being the open and avowed instruments of making such distributions. Atterbury.

2. Latently; so as not to be obvious; not apparently.
Those thoughts are not wholly mine; but either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.

SE'CRETNESS. n. f. [from secret.]

1. State of being hidden.

2. Quality of keeping a secret.
I could muster up
My giants and my witches too,
Which are vast constancy and secretness. Donne.

SE'CRETORY. adj. [from secretus, Latin.] Performing the office of secretion, or animal separation.
All the glands are a congeries of vessels complicated together, whereby they give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory, which afterwards exonerate themselves into one duct. Ray.

SECT. n. f. [secte, Fr. secta, Lat. from seclando.]

1. A body of men following some particular master, or united in some settled tenets. Often in a bad sense.
We'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
That ebb and flow by th' moon. Shakspeare.
The greatest vicissitude of things is the vicissitude of sects and religions: the true religion is built upon a rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time. Bacon.
The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause
So far from their own will as to the laws,
You for their umpire and their synod take. Dryden.
The academics were willing to admit the goods of fortune into their notion of felicity; but no sects of old philosophers did ever leave a room for greatness. Dryden.
A sect of freethinkers is a sum of cyphers. Bentley.

2. In Shakspeare it seems to be misprinted for set.
Of our unbitted lusts, I take this that you call love to be a sect or cion. Othello.

SE'CTARISM. n. f. [from sect.] Disposition to petty sects, in opposition to things established.
Nothing hath more marks of schism and sectarism than this presbyterian way. King Charles.

SE'CTARY. n. f. [seclaire, French; from sect.]

1. One who divides from publick establishment, and joins with those distinguished by some particular whims.
My lord, you are a seclary; Shakspeare.
That's the plain truth.
Romish catholic tenets are inconsistent, on the one hand, with the truth of religion professed and protested by the church of England, whence we are called protestants; and the anabaptists, and separatists, and seclaries, on the other hand, whose tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.
The number of seclaries does not concern the clergy in point of interest or conscience. Swift.

2. A follower; a pupil.
The seclaries of my celestial skill,
That wont to be the world's chief ornament,
They under keep. Spenser.

SECTA'TOR. n. f. [seclateur, French; seclator, Latin.] A follower; an imitator; a disciple.
Hereof the wiser sort and the best learned philosophers were not ignorant, as Cicero witnesseth, gathering the opinion of Aristotle and his seclators. Raleigh.

SE'CTION. n. f. [section, French; sectio, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting or dividing.
In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion. Wotton.

2. A part divided from the rest.

3. A small and distinct part of a writing or book.
Instead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read, of the prophets, that which in likeness of matter came nearest to each section of their law. Hooker.
The production of volatile salts I reserve till I mention them in another section. Boyle.
Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections. Locke.

SE'CTOR. n. f. [secler, French.] In geometry.
Seclor is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhombs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals, and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematics, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere. All the lines of the seclor can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harris.

SE'CLULAR. adj. [seclularis, Latin; seclier, French.]

1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.
This, in every several man's actions of common life, appertaineth unto moral, in publick and political seclular affairs, unto civil wisdom. Hooker.
Then shall they seek t' avail themselves of names, Places, and titles; and with these to join Secular pow'r, though feigning still to act By spiritual. Milton.

2. [In the church of Rome.] Not bound by monastick rules.
Those northern nations easily embraced the religion of those they subdued, and by their devotion gave great authority and reverence, and thereby ease, to the clergy, both seclular and regular. Temple.
In France, vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, seclular and religious, live upon the labours of others. Addison.

3. [seclaire, French.] Happening or coming once in a secler or century.
The seclular year was kept but once in a century. Addison.

SECLARITY. n. f. [from seclular.]
Worldliness; attention to the things of the present life.
Littleness and seclarity of spirit is the greatest enemy to contemplation. Burnet.

To SECLARIZE. v. a. [seclariser, Fr. from seclular.]

1. To convert from spiritual appropriations to common use.

2. To make worldly.

SE'CLULARLY. adv. [from seclular.] In a worldly manner.

SE'CLARNNESS. n. f. [from seclular.]
Worldliness.

The membrane in which the embryo is wrapped; the afterbirth.
The casting of the skin is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the seclundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for the seclundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is. Bacon.

Future ages lie

Wrapp'd in their sacred secundine asleep. Cowley.
If the fetus be taken out of the womb inclosed in the secundines, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Ray.

SECURE. adj. [securus, Latin.]

1. Free from fear; exempt from terror; easy; assured.

Confidence then bore thee on secure
To meet no danger. Milton.

2. Confident; not distrustful: with of.

But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.

One maid she had, belov'd above the rest;
Secure of her, the secret she confess'd. Dryden.

The portion of their wealth they design for the uses of the poor, they may throw into one of these publick repositories, secure that it will be well employed. Atterbury.

3. Sure; not doubting: with of.

It concerns the most secure of his strength, to pray to God not to expose him to an enemy. Rogers.

In Lethe's lake souls long oblivion taste;
Of future life secure, forgetful of the past. Dryden.

Haply too secure of our discharge
From penalty. Milton.

We live and act as if we were perfectly secure of the final event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

4. Careless; wanting caution; wanting vigilance.

Judges.

5. Free from danger; safe.

Let us not then suspect our happy state,
As not secure to single or combin'd. Milton.

Messapus next,
Secure of steel, and fated from the fate,
In pomp appears. Dryden.

Secure from fortune's blows,
Secure of what I cannot lose,
In my small pinnacle I can sail. Dryden.

6. It has sometimes of before the object in all its senses; but more properly from before evil, or the cause of evil.To SECURE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.

Nothing left
That might his happy state secure,
Secure from outward force. Milton.

Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain
floating estate with as without them. Locke.

That prince, who shall be so wise as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection to the honest industry of mankind against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.

Deeper to wound, she thins the fight;
She drops her arms to gain the field;

Secures her conquest by her flight,
And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.

Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate,
by paying an ingenuous and laudable deference to his friend. Broom.

2. To protect; to make safe.

I spread a cloud before the victor's fight,
Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secur'd his flight;
Ev'n then secur'd him, when I fought with joy
The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryden.

Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more entertaining, to secure the mind

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet musick with th' enamell'd stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;

And so by many winding nooks he strays,
With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakspeare.

Adonis, painted by a running brook,
And Cytherea all in sedges hid;

Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Shakspeare.

In hotter countries a fly called lucciole, that shineth as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.

He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.

My bonds I brake,
Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,
Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Denham.

Niphates, with inverted urn,
And drooping sedge, shall his Armenia mourn.
Dryden.

SE'DGY. adj. [from sedge.] Overgrown with narrow flags.

On the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour,
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.

follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain
floating estate with as without them. Locke.

That prince, who shall be so wise as, by established
laws of liberty, to secure protection to the honest
industry of mankind against the oppression of power,
will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.

Deeper to wound, she thuns the fight;
She drops her arms to gain the field;

Secures her conquest by her flight,
And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.

Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate,
by paying an ingenuous and laudable deference to his friend. Broomie.

2. To protect; to make safe.

I spread a cloud before the victor's fight,
Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secur'd his flight;
Ev'n then secur'd him, when I fought with joy
The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryden.

From flight, seditious angel. Milton.
But if she has deform'd this earthly life
With murd'rous rapine and seditious strife,
In everlasting darkness must she lie;
Still more unhappy that she cannot die. Prior.

SEDITIOUSLY. adv. [from seditious.]
Tumultuously; with faction turbulence.
SEDITIOUSNESS. n. s. [from seditious.]
Turbulence; disposition to sedition.

TO SEDUCE. v. a. [seduco, Lat. seducere, French.] To draw aside from the right;
to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

'Tis meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes;
For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Shaksp.
Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shaksp.
A beauty-wining and distressed widow
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shaksp.

In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Timoth.
I shall never gratify the spitefulness of a few with any sinister thoughts of all their allegiance, whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
Angels. Milton.

Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Jonson's hostile name;
Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise. Dryden.

SEDUCEMENT. n. s. [from seduce.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.

To season them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, ere any flattering seduce-ment or vain principle seize them wandering, some easy and delightful book of education should be read to them. Milton.

Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying pow'r,
The nymph's seducements, and the magick bow'r. Pope.

SEDUCER. n. s. [from seduce.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter;
a corrupter.

Grant it me, O king; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone. Shaksp.
There is a teaching by restraining seducers, and so removing the hindrances of knowledge. South.
The soft seducer, with enticing looks,
The bellowing rivals to the fight provokes. Dryden.
He, whose firm faith no reason could remove,
Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.

SEDUCIBLE. adj. [from seduce.] Cor-ruptible; capable of being drawn aside from the right.

The vicious example of ages past poisons the curiosity of the present, affording a hint of sin unto seducible spirits. Brown.

We owe much of our error to the power which our affections have over our so easy seducible understandings. Glanville.

SEDUCTION. n. s. [seduction, Fr. seductus, Lat.] The act of seducing; the act of drawing aside.

Whatsoever men's faith, patience, or perseverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this sin, the seduction of Balaam, was sure to bring judgments. Hammond.

To procure the miseries of others in those extremities, wherein we hold an hope to have no society

SEE

ourselves, is a strain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary seduction of hell. Brown.

The deceiver soon found out this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him from this way of seduction. Glanville.

Helen ascribes her seduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.

A woman who is above flattery, and despises all praise but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is, morally speaking, out of reach of seduction. Clarissa.

SEDULITY. n. s. [sedulitas, Lat.] Diligent assiduity; laboriousness; industry;
application; intenseness of endeavour.

Man oftentimes pursues, with great sedulity and earnestness, that which cannot stand him in any stead for vital purpose. Hooker.

Let there be but the same propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry in men's enquiries into it.
South.

SEDULOUS. adj. [sedulus, Lat.] Assiduous; industrious; laborious; diligent; painful.

Not sedulous by nature to indite
Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroick deem'd. Milton.

What signifies the sound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to such an end. L'Estrange.

The goat, now bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthæa, reach'd her teat, distent
With milk, thy early food: the sedulous bee
Distill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.

The bare majority of a few representatives is often procured by great industry and application, wherein those who engage in the pursuits of malice are much more sedulous than such as would prevent them.
Swift.

SEDULOUSLY. adv. [from sedulous.]
Assiduously; industriously; laboriously; diligently; painfully.

The ritual, preceptive, prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Govern. of the Tongue.

All things by experience
Are most improv'd; then sedulously think
To meliorate thy stock, no way or rule
Be unessay'd. Philips.

SEDULOUSNESS. n. s. [from sedulous.]
Assiduity; assiduousness; industry; diligence.

SEE. n. s. [sedes, Lat.] The seat of episcopal power; the diocese of a bishop.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war?
Shaksp.

It is a safe opinion for their sees, empires, and kingdoms; and for themselves, if they be wise.
Bacon.

The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see.
Addison.

Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

TO SEE. v. a. pret. I saw; part. pass.
seen. [reon, Sax. sien, Dutch.]

1. To perceive by the eye.

Dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again. Shaksp.

I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it. Isaiab.

I speak that which I have seen with my father, and ye do that which you have seen with yours.
John.

SEE

He'll lead the life of gods, and be
By gods and heroes seen, and gods and heroes see.
Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your fight, wine is good for you; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

I see her sober over a sampler. Pope.

2. To observe; to find.

Seven other kine came up, lean fleshed, such as I never saw for badness. Genesis.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy. Milton.

Give them first one simple idea, and see that they perfectly comprehend it, before you go any farther.
Locke.

The thunderbolt we see used, by the greatest poet of Augustus's age, to express irresistible force in battle.
Addison.

3. To discover; to descry.

Who is so gross
As cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold but says he sees it not,
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought?
Shaksp.

4. To converse with.

The main of them may be reduced to language,
and to an improvement in wisdom and prudence,
by seeing men, and conversing with people of different tempers and customs. Locke.

5. To attend; to remark.

I had a mind to see him out, and therefore did not care for contradicting him. Addison.

TO SEE. v. n.

1. To have the power of sight; to have by the eye perception of things distant.

Who maketh the seeing or the blind? have not I,
the Lord? Exodus.
Air hath some secret decree of light; otherwise cats and owls could not see in the night. Bacon.

2. To discern without deception.

Many sagacious persons will find us out, will look under our mask, and see through all our fine preten-sions, and discern the absurdity of telling the world that we believe one thing when we do the contrary.
Tillotson.

Could you see into my secret soul,
There you might read your own dominion doubled.
Dryden.

You may see into the spirit of them all, and form your pen from those general notions. Felton.

3. To inquire; to distinguish.

See whether fear doth make thee wrong her.
Shaksp.

4. To be attentive.

Mark and perform it, see'st thou? for the fall
Of any point in 't shall be death. Shaksp.

5. To scheme; to contrive.

Cassio's a proper man: let me see now;
To get his place. Shaksp.

SEE interjection. [originally the imperative of the verb see.] Lo; look; observe;
behold.

See! see! upon the banks of Boyne he stands,
By his own view adjusting his commands. Halifax.

See! the sole bliss heav'n could on all bestow,
Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know.
Pope.

See what it is to have a poet in your house. Pope.

SEED. n. s. [ræd, Sax. seed, Danish;
saed, Dutch.]

1. The organized particle produced by plants and animals, from which new plants and animals are generated.

If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me. Shaksp.

Seed of a year old is the best, though some seed and grains last better than others. Bacon.

That every plant has its seed, is an evident sign of divine providence. Mor.

Did they ever see any herbs, except those of the grass-leaved tribe, come up without two seed leaves;

SEE

which to me is an argument that they came all of seed, there being no reason else why they should produce two seed leaves different from the subsequent.

Ray.

Just gods! all other things their like produce;
The vine arises from her mother's juice:
When feeble plants or tender flow'rs decay,
They to their seed their images convey.
In the fourth part of Staffordshire they go to the north for seed corn.

Prior.

Mortimer.

2. First principle; original.

The seed of whatsoever perfect virtue groweth from us, is a right opinion touching things divine.

Hooker.

3. Principle of production.

Praise of great acts he scatters, as a seed
Which may the like in coming ages breed.

Waller.

4. Progeny; offspring; descendants.

Next him king Lear in happy peace long reign'd;
But had no issue male him to succeed,
But three fair daughters which were well uptrain'd
In all that seem'd fit for kingly seed. Fairy Queen.
The thing doth touch
The main of all your states, your blood, your seed.

Daniel.

When God gave Canaan to Abraham, he thought fit to put his seed into the grant too.

Locke.

5. Race; generation; birth.

Of mortal seed they were not held,
Which other mortals so excell'd;
And beauty too in such excess,
As yours, Zelinda! claims no less.

Waller.

To SEED. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow to perfect maturity, so as to shed the seed.

Whate'er I plant, like corn on barren earth,
By an equivocal birth,
Seeds and runs up to poetry.

Swift.

2. To shed the seed.

They pick up all the old roots, except what they design for seed, which they let stand to feed the next year.

Mortimer.

SEEDCAKE. n. f. [seed and cake.] A sweet cake interspersed with warm aromatick feeds.

Remember, wife,

The seedcake, the pasties, and furrery pot.

Tusser.

SEEDLIP. } n. f. A vessel in which the SEEDLOP. } sower carries his seed.

Ainsworth.

SEEDPEARL. n. f. [seed and pearl.] Small grains of pearl.

In the dissolution of seedpearl in some acid menstruum, if a good quantity of the little pearls be cast in whole, they will be carried in swarms from the bottom to the top.

Boyle.

SEEDPLOT. n. f. [seed and plot.] The ground on which plants are sowed to be afterward transplanted.

To counsel others, a man must be furnished with an universal store in himself to the knowledge of all nature; that is, the matter and seedplot: there are the seats of all argument and invention.

Ben Jonson.

Humility is a seedplot of virtue, especially christian, which thrives best when 'tis deep rooted in the humble lowly heart.

Hammond.

It will not be useless to present a full narration of this rebellion, looking back to those passages by which the seedplots were made and framed, from whence those mischiefs have successively grown.

Clarendon.

SEEDTIME. n. f. [seed and time.] The season of sowing.

While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest shall not cease.

Genesis.

If he would have two tributes in one year, he must give them two seedtimes, and two harvests.

Bacon.

The first rain fell upon the seedtime about October, and was to make the seed to root; the latter was to fill the ear.

Brown.

Day and night,
Seedtime and harvest, heat and hoary frost,
Shall hold their course, till fire purge all things.

Milton.

SEE

Their very seedtime was their harvest, and by sowing tares they immediately reaped gold.

Decay of Piety.

He that too curiously observes the face of the heavens, by missing his seedtime, will lose the hopes of his harvest.

Atterbury.

SEEDLING. n. f. [from seed.] A young plant just risen from the seed.

Carry into the shade such seedlings or plants as are for their choiceness reserved in pots.

Evelyn.

From the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison.

Shakspeare.

SEEDSMAN. n. f. [seed and man.]

1. The sower; he that scatters the seed.

The higher Nilus swells

The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsmen
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Shakspeare.

2. One that sows seed.

SEEDY. adj. [from seed.] Abounding with seed.

SEE'ING. n. f. [from see.] Sight; vision.
Love adds a precious seeing to the eye.

Shakspeare.

SEE'ING. } adv. [vu que, Fr. from SEE'ING that. } see. It would be more grammatically written, as vu que, pourvu que, in French; seen that, or provided that.] Since; sith; it being so that.

Why should not they be as well victualled for so long time, as the ships are usually for a year, seeing it is easier to keep victuals on land than water?

Spenser.

How shall they have any trial of his doctrine, learning, and ability to preach, seeing that he may not publicly either teach or exhort, because he is not yet called to the ministry?

Whitgift.

Seeing every nation affords not experience and tradition enough for all kind of learning, therefore we are taught the languages of those people who have been most industrious after wisdom.

Milton.

Seeing they explained the phenomena of vision, imagination, and thought, by certain thin fleeces of atoms that flow from the surfaces of bodies, and by their subtlety penetrate any obstacle, and yet retain the exact lineaments of the several bodies from which they proceed: in consequence of this hypothesis they maintained, that we could have no phantasy of any thing, but what did really subsist either intire or in its several parts.

Bentley.

To SEEK. v. a. pret. I sought; part. pass.
sought. [recan, Sax. soecken, Dutch.]

1. To look for; to search for: often with out.

He did range the town to seek me out.

Shakspeare.

I have a venturesome fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts.

Shakspeare.

Because of the money returned in our sacks, are we brought in, that he may seek occasion against us, and take us for bondmen.

Genesis.

He seeketh unto him a cunning workman, to prepare a graven image.

Isaiab.

Seek thee a man which may go with thee. Tobit.
Sweet peace, where dost thou dwell?

I humbly crave,

Let me once know;

I sought thee in a secret cave,

And ask'd if peace were there.

Herbert.

The king meant not to seek out nor to decline fighting with them, if they put themselves in his way.

Clarendon.

So fatal 'twas to seek temptations out!
Most confidence has still most cause to doubt.

Dryden.

We must seek out some other original of power for the government of politicks than this of Adam, or else there will be none at all in the world.

Locke.

2. To solicit; to endeavour to gain.

Others tempting him, sought of him a sign.

Luke.

SEE

The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God.

Psalms.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us, unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts.

Milton.

Oft our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd.

Dryden.

3. To go to find.

Let us seek death, or, he not found, supply
His office.

Milton.

Dardanus, though born
On Latian plains, yet sought the Phrygian shore.

Dryden.

Like fury seiz'd the rest; the progress known,
All seek the mountains, and forsake the town.

Dryden.

Since great Ulysses sought the Phrygian plains,
Within these walls inglorious silence reigns.

Pope.

Indulge one labour more,
And seek Atreides on the Spartan shore.

Pope.

4. To pursue by machinations.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life.

Shakspeare.

David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life.

1 Samuel.

To SEEK. v. n.

1. To make search; to make inquiry.

Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read.

Isaiab.

I have been forced to relinquish that opinion, and have endeavour'd to seek after some better reason.

Spectator.

2. To endeavour,

Why should he mean me ill, or seek to harm?

Milton.

Ask not what pains, nor further seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below.

Dryden.

3. To make pursuit.

Violent men have sought after my soul. Psalms.
If thy brother's ox or sheep go astray, it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it.

All the earth sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom.

1 Kings.

Unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come.

Deuteronomy.

5. To endeavour after.

Being a man of experience, he wished by wisdom to order that which the young prince sought for by war.

Kneller.

To SEEK. [an adverbial mode of speech.]

At a loss; without measures, knowledge, or experience.

Being brought and transferred from other services abroad, though they be of good experience in those, yet in these they will be new to seek; and before they have gathered experience, they shall buy it with great loss to his majesty.

Spenser.

Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek.

Milton.

But they misplace them all;
And are as much to seek in other things,
As he that only can design a tree,
Would be to draw a shipwreck.

Roscommon.

SEEKER. n. f. [from seek.]

1. One that seeks; an inquirer.

Though I confess that in philosophy I am a seeker, yet cannot believe that a sceptick in philosophy must be one in divinity.

Glanville.

A language of a very witty volatile people, seekers after novelty, and abounding with variety of notions.

Locke.

2. The name of a sect which professed no determinate religion.

SEEKSORROW. n. f. [seek and sorrow.]
One who contrives to give himself vexation.

A field they go, where many lookers be,
And thou seeksorrow, Klaius, them among:
Indeed thou saidst it was thy friend to see,
Strephon, whose absence seem'd unto thee long.

To SEEL. v. a. [sceller, to seal, Fr.] To close the eyes. A term of falconry, the eyes of a wild or haggard hawk being for a time feeded or closed.

SEE

Now she brought them to see a feeded dove, who the blinder she was, the higher she brave. Sidney.

Mine eyes no more on vanity shall feed,
But feeded up with death shall have their deadly meed. Fairy Queen.

Come, feeding night,
Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day. Shakspeare.

Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy; for no man will take such parts, unless he be like the feeded dove, that mounts and mounts, because he cannot see about him. Bacon.

Since, blinded with ambition, he did soar
Like a feed'd dove, his crimes shall be his punishment,
To be depriv'd of sight. Denham.

To SEEL. v. n. [rýllan, Sax.] To lean on one side.

When a ship seels or rows in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Raleigh.

My seely sheep like well below,
For they been hale enough and trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser.

2. Silly; foolish; simple.

Peacock and turkie, that nibbles off top,
Are very ill neighbours to seely poor hop. Tusser.

To SEEM. v. n. [sembler, Fr. unless it has a Teutonic original, as seemly certainly has.]

1. To appear; to make a show; to have semblance.

My lord, you've lost a friend, indeed;
And I dare swear you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow; it is sure your own. Shakspeare.

Speak: we will not trust our eyes
Without our ears: thou art not what thou seem'st.
Shakspeare.

So spake th' Omnipotent; and with his words,
All seem'd well pleas'd; all seem'd, but were not all. Milton.

In holy nuptials tied;
A seeming widow, and a secret bride. Dryden.
Observe the youth

Already seems to snuff the vital air. Dryden.

2. To have the appearance of truth.

It seems to me, that the true reason why we have so few versions which are tolerable, is because there are so few who have all the talents requisite for translation. Dryden.

3. In Shakspeare, to seem, perhaps, signifies to be beautiful.

Sir, there she stands:
If aught within that little seeming substance
May fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours. King Lear.

4. It SEEMS. A phrase hard to be explained. It sometimes signifies that there is an appearance, though no reality; but generally it is used ironically to condemn the thing mentioned, like the Latin scilicet, or the old English forsooth. Id mihi datur negotii scilicet. This, it seems, is to be my task.

The earth by these, 'tis said,
This fingle crop of men and women bred;
Who, grown adult (so chance, it seems; enjoin'd)
Did male and female propagate. Blackmore.

Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
Rodrigo meant t' have sent. Shakspeare.

It seems, the camel's hair is taken by painters for the skin with the hair on. Brown.

SEE'MER. n. s. [from seem.] One that carries an appearance.

Angelo scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If pow'r change purpose, what our seemers be. Shakspeare.

SEE'MING. n. s. [from seem.]

1. Appearance; show; semblance.

All good seeming,
By thy revolt, oh husband, shall be thought
Put on for villany. Shakspeare.

Give him heedful note;
And, after, we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming. Shakspeare.

2. Fair appearance.

For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and favour all the winter long. Shakspeare.

3. Opinion.

Nothing more clear unto their seeming, than that, a new Jerusalem being often spoken of in the scripture, they undoubtedly were themselves that new Jerusalem. Hooker.

His persuasive words impregn'd
With reason to her seeming. Milton.

SEE'MINGLY. adv. [from seeming.] In appearance; in show; in semblance.

To this her mother's plot,
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor. Shakspeare.

They to their viands fell, not seemingly
The angels, nor in mist. Milton.

I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Glanville.

The city dame was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part. L'Estrange.

The king and haughty empress, to our wonder,
If not aton'd, yet seemingly at peace. Dryden.

This the father seemingly complied with; but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise set aside. Addison.

They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury.

SEE'MINGNESS. n. s. [from seeming.]

The seemingness of those reasons persuade us on the other side. Digby.

SEE'MLINESS. n. s. [from seemly.] Decency; handsomeness; comeliness; grace; beauty.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, seemliness with portliness, and currentness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than full of sweetness? Camden.

SEE'MLY. adj. [soommelig, Danish; from soome, Islandick, honour or decency.]

Decent; becoming; proper; fit.

Suspense of judgment and exercise of charity were safer and seemlier for christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hooker.

I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons. Shakspeare.

The wife

Safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.

May we enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts Enkindle mirth and hospitable love. Philips.

SEE'MLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a decent manner; in a proper manner.

There, seemly rang'd in peaceful order, stood Ulysses' arms, now long diffus'd to blood. Pope.

SEEN. adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.

SEG

Petruchio shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista, as a schoolmaster

Well seen in musick. Shakspeare.

Than his great brother read in states and men. Dryden.

SE'ER. n. s. [from see.]

1. One who sees.

We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Spectator.

2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

By day your frighted seers
Shall call for fountains to express their tears,
And with their eyes were floods: by night from dreams

Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show
Emblems of heav'nly wrath, and mystick types of woe. Prior.

SEE'WOOD. n. s. See SEARWOOD. Dry wood.

Caught, like dry stubble fir'd, or like seerwood;
Yet from the wound ensue no purple flood,
But look'd a bubbling mass of frying blood. Dryden.

SEE'SAW. n. s. [from saw.] A reciprocating motion.

His wit all seesaw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope.

To SEE'SAW. v. n. [from saw.] To move with a reciprocating motion.

Sometimes they were like to pull John over, then it went all of a sudden again on John's side; so they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Arbutnot.

To SEETH. v. a. preterit I sod or seethed; part. pass. sodden. [reoban, Sax. soiden, Dutch.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor.

The Scythians used to seeth the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish. Spenser.

Go, suck the subtle blood o' th' grape,
Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging. Shakspeare.

Set on the great pot, and seeth pottage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings.

To SEETH. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.

The boiling baths at Cairbadon,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames which they are warm'd upon. Fairy Queen.

I will make a complimentary assault upon him; for my business seeths. Shakspeare.

Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cold reason ever comprehends. Shakspeare.

The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook, and stuck it into the pan. 1 Samuel.

SEE'THER. n. s. [from seeth.] A boiler; a pot.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone. Dryden.

SE'GMENT. n. s. [segment, Fr. segmentum, Latin.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.

Unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles, for half a year, some segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round. Brown.

Their segments or arcs, which appeared so numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.

SE'IGNITY. n. s. [from seignis, Lat.] Sluggishness; inactivity. Dict.

To SE'GREGATE. v. a. [segrego, Lat. segreger, French.] To set apart; to separate from others.

SEGREGATION. n. f. [segregation, Fr. from segregate.] Separation from others. What shall we hear of this?

—A segregation of the Turkish fleet;
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shaksp.

SE'JANT. adj. [In heraldry.] Sitting.

SEIGNEURIAL. adj. [from seignior.] Invested with large powers; independent. Those lands were seigneurial. Temple.

SE'IGNIOR. n. f. [from senior, Latin; seigneur, French.] A lord. The title of honour given by Italians.

SE'IGNIORY. n. f. [seigneurie, Fr. from seignior.] A lordship; a territory. O'Neal never had any seigniory over that country, but what by encroachment he got upon the English. Spenser.

Were you not restor'd
To all the duke of Norfolk's seigniories? Shaksp.
Hosea, in the person of God, sayeth of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; they have set a seigniory over themselves: which place proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon.

William, earl of Pembroke, being lord of all Leinster, had royal jurisdiction throughout that province, and every one of his five sons enjoyed that seigniory successively. Davies.

SE'IGNORAGE. n. f. [seigneurie, French; from seignior.] Authority; acknowledgment of power.

They brought work to the mint, and a part of the money coined to the crown for seignorage. Locke.

To SE'IGNORISE. v. a. [from seignior.] To lord over.

As fair he was as Cytherea's make,
As proud as he that *seignorise*th hell. Fairfax.

SEINE. n. f. [regne, Saxon; seine, senne, feme, Fr.] A net used in fishing.

They have cock-boats for passengers, and seine boats for taking of pilchards. Carew.

SE'INER. n. f. [from seine.] A fisher with nets.

Seiners complain, with open mouth, that these drovers work much prejudice to the commonwealth of fishermen, and reap small gain to themselves. Carew.

To SEIZE. v. a. [saisir, French.]

1. To take hold of; to gripe; to grasp.

Then as a tiger, who by chance hath spied,
In some purlieu, two gentle fawns at play,
Straight couches close, then rising changes oft
His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground
Whence rushing he might surest seize them both,
Both griped in each paw. Milton.

2. To take possession of by force.

At last they seize
The scepter, and regard not David's sons. Milton.

3. To take possession of; to lay hold on; to invade suddenly.

In her sad breast the prince's fortunes roll,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.

4. To take forcible possession of by law.

An escheator of London had arrested a clothier that was outlawed, and seized his goods. Camden.
It was judged, by the highest kind of judgment, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.

5. To make possessed; to put in possession of.

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:
As when a griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encount'reth in his flight,
Through wildest air making his idle way. Fairy Queen.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid,

There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beautiful prize,
Nor envied Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addis.

To SEIZE. v. n. To fix the grasp or the power on any thing.

Fairest Cordelia,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be 't lawful I take up what's cast away? Shaksp.

Where there is a design of supplanting, that necessarily requires another of accusing: even Jezebel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge. Decay of Piety.

SE'IZIN. n. f. [saisine, French.]

1. [In law.] Is of two sorts: seisin in fact, and seisin in law. Seisin in fact, is when a corporal possession is taken: seisin in law, is when something is done which the law accounteth a seisin, as enrolment. This is as much as a right to lands and tenements, though the owner be by wrong disseized of them. Corwell.

2. The act of taking possession.

Every indulged sin gives Satan livery and seisin of his heart, and a power to dispose of it as he pleases. Decay of Piety.

Seisin is the same, in the canon law, as livery and seisin at the common law. Ayliffe.

3. The things possessed.

Many recoveries were had, as well by heirs as successors, of the seizin of their predecessors. Hale.

SE'IZURE. n. f. [from seize.]

1. The act of seizing.

2. The thing seized.

Sufficient that thy pray'rs are heard, and death,
Then due by sentence when thou didst transgress,
Defeated of his seizure, many days
Giv'n thee of grace. Milton.

3. The act of taking forcible possession.

Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands. Shaksp.

In the general town he maintained a seizure, and possession of the whole. Wotton.

Henry continued to burn protestants, after he had cast off the pope; and his seizure of ecclesiastical revenues cannot be reckoned as a mark of the church's liberty. Swift.

4. Gripe; possession.

And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shaksp.
Make o'er thy honour by a deed of trust,
And give me seizure of the mighty wealth. Dryden.

5. Catch.

Let there be no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable, to play upon it. Watts.

SE'LCOUTH. adj. [selb, rare, Sax. and couth, known.] Rarely known; uncommon: Spenser. The same with uncouth.

SE'LDOM. adv. [selban, rarely; selbon, more rarely; selbort, most rarely. Selban is supposed to be contracted from selbaen, or selb, rare, and hpaenne, when, Saxon; selden, Dutch; seltan, German.] Rarely; not often; not frequently.

Wisdom and youth are seldom joined in one; and the ordinary course of the world is more according to Job's observation, who giveth men advice to seek wisdom amongst the ancients, and in the length of days understanding. Hooker.

There is true joy conveyed to the heart by preventing grace, which pardoning grace seldom gives. South.

Where the flights of fancy are managed with good judgment, the seldom it is seen it is the more valuable. Grav.

SE'LDOMNESS. n. f. [from seldom.] Uncommonness; infrequency; rareness; rarity. Little used.

Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except perhaps in the seldomness and ostentatiousness of doing well. Hooker.

SE'LD SHOWN. adj. [seld and shown.] Seldom exhibited to view.

Seldshown flames

Do press among the popular throngs. Shaksp.

To SELE'CT. v. a. [selectus, Latin.] To choose in preference to others rejected.

The footmen, selected out of all the provinces, were greatly diminished, being now scarce eight thousand strong. Kneller.

The pious chief

SELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.] Nicely chosen; choice; culled out on account of superiour knowledge.

To the nuptial bow'r

I led her, bushing like the morn: all heav'n,
And happy constellations, on that hour
Shed their selectest influence. Milton.

Select from vulgar herds, with garlands gay,

A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way. Prior.

SELE'CTION. n. f. [selectio, Latin; from select.] The act of culling or choosing; choice.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems but arbitrary. Brown.

SELE'CTNESS. n. f. [from select.] The state of being select.

SELE'CTOR. n. f. [from select.] He who selects.

SELENOGRA'PHICAL. } adj. [selenogra-

SELENOGRA'PHICK. } phique, French;
from selenography.] Belonging to selenography.

SELE'NOGRAPHY. n. f. [selenographic, Fr. σεληνη and γραφω.] A description of the moon.

Hevelius, in his accurate selenography, or description of the moon, hath well translated the known appellations of regions, seas, and mountains, unto the parts of that luminary. Brown.

SELF. pronoun; plur. selves. [selba, Gothick; rylf, rylfa, Saxon; self, selve, Dutch.]

1. Its primary signification seems to be that of an adjective. Very; particular; this above others; sometimes, one's own.

Shoot another arrow that self way

Which you did shoot the first. Shaksp.

The cruel ministers, by self and violent hands,

Took off her life. Shaksp.

On these self hills the air is so thin, that it is not sufficient to bear up the body of a bird. Raleigh.

At that self moment enters Palamon

The gate of Venus. Dryden.

2. It is united both to the personal pronouns, and to the neutral pronoun it, and is always added when they are used reciprocally, or return upon themselves: as, I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; the people hiss me, but I clap myself; thou lovest thyself, though the world scorns thee.

They cast to build a city,

And get themselves a name. Milton.

He permits

Within himself unworthy pow'rs to reign

Over free reason. Milton.

Self is that conscious thinking thing, which is sensible or conscious of pleasure and pain, capable of happiness and misery, and so is concerned for itself, as far as that consciousness extends. Locke.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically in the nominative case: as, myself will decide it; I myself will come; himself shall revenge it. This use of self, thus compounded, without the pronoun personal, is chiefly poetical.

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun substantive, self is in appearance an adjective: joined to my, thy, our, yours, pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive. Even when compounded with him it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves.

No more be mention'd then of violence Against ourselves, or wilful barrenness. Milton.

5. Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest, may, contrary to the analogy of my, him, them, be used as nominatives.

6. It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded: as, he did it himself.

A horse well bitted, which himself did dress. Dryden.

And touch'd with miseries myself have known,
I learn to pity woes so like my own. Dryden.

7. It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent self to excel. F. Queen.

Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of our selves seems most worthy of our endeavour. Hale.

Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self, and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things; in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being. Locke.

It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to it self now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come. Locke.

The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our selves, furnishes another long rank of prejudice. Watts.

8. It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakspeare is often harsh.

Then held she her tongue, and cast down a self-accusing look, finding that in herself she had shot out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind than she minded to have done. Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passions do deceive
We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sidney.

Till Strephon's plaining voice him nearer drew,
Where by his words his self-like case he knew. Sidney.

Ah! where was first that cruel cunning found,
To frame of earth a vessel of the mind,
Where it should be to self-destruction bound? Sidney.
Before the door sat self-consuming care,
Day and night keeping wary watch and ward. Fairy Queen.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear that wants hard use. Shakspeare.

I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought t' have spoke thereof;
But being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it. Shakspeare.

Nor know I aught
By me that's said or done amiss this night,
Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence assails us. Shakspeare.

He walks, and that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore. Shakspeare.

It is in my power, in one self-born hour,
To plant and o'erwhelm custom. Shakspeare.

His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But self-affrighted tremble at his sin. Shakspeare.

The stars above us govern our conditions;
Else one self-mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. Shakspeare.

I'm made of that self-metal as my sister,
And prize me at her worth. Shakspeare.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth. Shakspeare.

He may do some good on her:
A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is. Shakspeare.

But lest myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song. Shakspeare.

He conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure,
Tript me behind: being down, insulted, rail'd,
Got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subdued. Shakspeare.

The Everlasting fixt
His cannon 'gainst self-slaughter. Shakspeare.

Know if his last purpose hold,
Or whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course. He's full of alteration
And self-reproving. Shakspeare.

More or less to others paying,
Than by self-offences weighing:
Shame to him whose cruel striking Kills for faults of his own liking. Shakspeare.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him with self-caparisons,
Point against point. Shakspeare.

Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting. Shakspeare.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakspeare.

His lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city; he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride. Shakspeare.

You promis'd
To lay aside self-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition. Shakspeare.

In their anger they slew a man, and in their self-will they digged down a wall. Genesis.

The most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint as to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon.

Hast thou set up nothing in competition with God;
no pride, profit, self-love, or self-interest of thy own? Duppa.

Up through the spacious palace passed she
To where the king's proudly reposed head,
If any can be soft to tyranny,
And self-tormenting sin, had a soft bed. Crasshaw.

With a joyful willingness these self-loving reformers took possession of all vacant preferments, and with reluctance others parted with their beloved colleges and subsistence. Walton.

Repent the sin; but if the punishment
Thou canst avoid, self-preservation bids. Milton.

Him fast sleeping soon he found,
In labyrinth of many a round self-roll'd. Milton.

Of times nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right, Well manag'd. Milton.

Self-knowing, and from thence Magnanimous, to correspond with heav'n. Milton.

So virtue giv'n for lost,
Deprest and overthrown, as seem'd,
Like that self-begotten bird,

In th' Arabian woods embost,
That no second knows nor third,
And lay ere while a holocaust,

From out her ashy womb now teem'd. Milton.

He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
My motions in him: longer than they move,
His heart I know how variable and vain,
Self-left. Milton.

Seneca approves this self-homicide. Hakewill.

Thyself from flattering self-conceit defend,
Nor what thou dost not know, to know pretend. Denham.

Man's that savage beast, whose mind,
From reason to self-love declin'd,
Delights to prey upon his kind. Denham.

Farewell, my tears;
And, my just anger, be no more confin'd
To vain complaints, or self-devouring silence. Denham.

They are yet more mad to think that men may rest by death, though they die in self-murder, the greatest sin. Graunt.

Are not these strange self-delusions, and yet attested by common experience? South.

If the image of God is only sovereignty, certainly we have been hitherto much mistaken, and hereafter are to beware of making ourselves unlike God, by too much self-denial and humility, South.

If a man would have a devout, humble, sin-abhorring, self-denying frame of spirit, he cannot take a more efficacious course to obtain it than by praying himself into it. South.

Let a man apply himself to the difficult work of self-examination, by a strict scrutiny into the whole estate of his soul. South.

A fatal self-impotence, such as defeats the design, and destroys the force, of all religion. South.

When he intends to bereave the world of an illustrious person, he may cast him upon a bold self-opinioned physician, worse than his distemper, who shall make a shift to cure him into his grave. South.

Neglect of friends can never be proved rational, till we prove the person using it omnipotent and self-sufficient, and such as can never need any mortal assistance. South.

By all human laws, as well as divine, self-murder has ever been agreed on as the greatest crime. Temple.

A self-conceited fop will swallow any thing. L'Estrange.

From Atreus though your ancient lineage came;
Yet my self-conscious worth, your high renown,
Your virtue, through the neighb'ring nations blown. Dryden.

He has given you all the commendation which his self-sufficiency could afford to any. Dryden.

Below yon sphere
There hangs the ball of earth and water mixt,
Self-center'd and unmov'd. Dryden.

All these receive their birth from other things,
But from himself the phoenix only springs;
Self-born, begotten by the parent flame
In which he burn'd, another and the same. Dryden.

The burning fire, that shone so bright,
Flew off all sudden with extinguish'd light,
And left one altar dark, a little space,
Which turn'd self-kindled, and renew'd the blaze. Dryden.

Thou first, O king! release the rights of sway;
Pow'r, self-restrain'd, the people best obey. Dryden.

Eighteen and nineteen are equal to thirty-seven,
by the same self-evidence that one and two are equal to three. Locke.

A contradiction of what has been said, is a mark of yet greater pride and self-conceit, when we take upon us to set another right in his story. Locke.

I am as justly accountable for any action done many years since, appropriated to me now by this self-consciousness, as I am for what I did the last moment. Locke.

Each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between: the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

This self-existent being hath the power of perfection, as well as of existence, in himself; for he that is above, or existeth without, any cause, that is, hath the power of existence in himself, cannot be without the power of any possible existence. Grew.

Body cannot be self-existent, because it is not self-movent; for motion is not of the essence of body, because we may have a definitive conception of body, abstracted from that of motion: wherefore motion is something else besides body, something without which body may be conceived to exist. Grew.

Confidence, as opposed to modesty, and distinguished from decent assurance, proceeds from self-opinion, occasioned by ignorance or flattery. Collier.

Bewilder'd, I my author cannot find,
Till some first cause, some self-existent mind,
Who form'd and rules all nature, is assign'd. Blackmore.

If a first body may to any place
Be not determin'd in the boundless space,
'Tis plain it then may absent be from all,
Who then will this a self-existence call? Blackmore.

Shall nature, erring from her first command,
Self-preservation, fall by her own hand? Granville.

Low nonsense is the talent of a cold phlegmatick temper: a writer of this complexion gropes his way softly amongst self-contradiction, and grovels in absurdities. Addison.

This fatal hypocrisy and self-deceit is taken notice of in these words, Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Speet.

SEL

The guilt of perjury is so self-evident, that it was always reckoned amongst the greatest crimes, by those who were only governed by the light of reason. Addison.

Self-sufficiency proceeds from inexperience. Addison.

Men had better own their ignorance, than advance doctrines which are self-contradictory. Spectator.

Light, which of all bodies is nearest allied to spirit, is also most diffusive and self-communicative. Norris.

Thus we see, in bodies, the more of kin they are to spirit in subtilty and refinement, the more spreading are they and self-diffusive. Norris.

God, who is an absolute spiritual act, and who is such a pure light as in which there is no darkness, must needs be infinitely self-imparting and communicative. Norris.

Every animal is conscious of some individual, self-moving, self-determining principle. Pope and Arbuthnot.

Nick does not pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradesman, a self-seeking wretch. Arbuthnot.

By the blast of self-opinion mov'd,
We wish to charm, and seek to be lov'd. Prior.

Living and understanding substances do clearly demonstrate to philosophical inquirers the necessary self-existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their Maker. Bentley.

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commence or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense. Bentley.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul; 'tis self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning. Bentley.

The philosophers, and even the epicureans, maintained the self-sufficiency of the godhead, and seldom or never sacrificed at all. Bentley.

Matter is not endued with self-motion, nor with a power to alter the course in which it is put: it is merely passive, and must ever continue in that state it is settled in. Cheyne.

I took not arms, till urg'd by self-defence,
The eldest law of nature. Rowe.

His labour and study would have shewn his early mistakes, and cured him of self-flattering delusions. Watts.

This is not to be done in a rash and self-sufficient manner; but with an humble dependance on divine grace, while we walk among snares. Watts.

The religion of Jesus, with all its self-denials, virtues, and devotions, is very practicable. Watts.

I heard in Crete this island's name;
For 'twas in Crete, my native soil, I came Self-banish'd thence. Pope.

Achilles's courage is furious and untractable; that of Ajax is heavy and self-confiding. Pope.

I doom, to fix the gallant ship,
A mark of vengeance on the fable deep;
To warn the thoughtless self-confiding train
No more unlicens'd thus to brave the main. Pope.

What is loose love? a transient gust,
A vapour fed from wild desire,
A wand'ring self-consuming fire. Pope.

In dubious thought the king awaits,
And self-considering, as he stands, debates. Pope.

By mighty Jove's command,
Unwilling have I trod this pleasing land;
For who self-mov'd with weary wing would sweep
Such length of ocean? Pope.

They who reach Parnassus' lofty crown
Employ their pains to spurn some others down;
And, while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contending wits become the sport of fools. Pope.

It may be thought that Ulysses here is too ostentatious, and that he dwells more than modesty allows upon his own accomplishments; but self-praise is sometimes no fault. Broome.

No wonder such a spirit, in such a situation, is provoked beyond the regards of religion, or self-conviction. Swift.

SE'LFHEAL. n. f. [brunella, Lat.] A plant, the same with sanicla.

SE'LFISH. adj. [from self.] Attentive only to one's own interest; void of regard for others.

What could the most aspiring selfish man desire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection, and such a goodness as will proportion a reward to it? Spectator.

SEL

Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair, list under reason, and deserve her care;

Those that imparted court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name. Pope.

SE'LFISHNESS. n. f. [from selfish.] Attention to his own interest, without any regard to others; self-love.

This sublimer love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, thoroughly refined from all base drops of selfishness and interest, nobly begets a perfect submission of our wills to the will of God. Boyle.

SE'LFISHLY. adv. [from selfish.] With regard only to his own interest; without love of others.

He can your merit selfishly approve,
And shew the sense of it without the love. Pope.

Which they dig out fro' the dells,
For their bairns bread, wives, and sells. B. Jonson.

SELL. n. f. [selle, French; sella, Latin.] A saddle. Obsolete.

Turning to that place, in which
He left his lofty steed with golden sells,
And goodly gorgeous barbes, him found not there. Fairy Queen.

To SELL. v. a. [ryllan, Saxon; sela, Islandick.]

1. To give for a price; to vend: the word correlative to buy.

The Midianites sold him into Egypt, unto Poti-phar. Genesis.

Let us sell him to the Ishmaelites. Genesis.

This sense is likewise mistress of an art,
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell. Davies.

All the inns and public-houses are obliged to furnish themselves with corn, which is sold out at a much dearer rate than 'tis bought up. Addison.

You have made an order that ale should be sold for three halfpence a quart. Swift.

2. To betray for money: as, he sold his country.

You would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude. Shakspeare.

To SELL. v. n. To have commerce or traffick with one.

I will buy with you, sell with you; but I will not eat with you. Shakspeare.

Consult not with a buyer of selling. Ecclesiasticus.

SE'LLANDER. n. f. A dry scab in a horse's hough or pattern. Ainsworth.

SE'LLER. n. f. [from sell.] The person that sells; vender.

To things of sale a seller's praise belongs. Shakspeare.

The name of the agent, of the seller, notary, and witnesses, are in both instruments. Addison.

SE'LVAGE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skinner thinks selvage is said as salvage, from its saving the cloth.] The edge of cloth where it is closed by complicating the threads.

Make loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain from the selvage in the coupling. Exodus.

SEM

SELVES. The plural of self.

Consciousness being interrupted, and we losing sight of our past selves, doubts are raised whether we are the same. Locke.

SEMBLABLE. adj. [semblable, French.] Like; resembling.

Then be abhorr'd
All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!

His semblable, yea himself, Timon disdains. Shakspeare.

With semblable reason we might expect a regularity in the winds. Brown.

SEMBLABLY. adv. [from semblable.] With resemblance.

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Semblably furnish'd like the king himself. Shakspeare.

SEMBLANCE. n. f. [semblance, French; from semblant.]

1. Likeness; resemblance; similitude; representation.

Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise:
Bethink thee on her virtues, that surmount
Her natural graces, that extinguish art:

Repeat their semblance often. Shakspeare.

She's but the sign and semblance of her honour;
Behold how like a maid she blushes here!

O, what authority and shew of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal! Shakspeare.

He with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not substance, gently rais'd
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears. Milton.

This last effort brought forth the opinion, that these bodies are not what they seem to be; that they are no shells, but mere sportings of active nature, and only semblances or imitations of shells. Woodw.

It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and semblance of virtue, only to conceal and disguise our vice. Rogers.

2. Appearance; show; figure.

Be you the soldier, for you likest are,
For manly semblance, and for skill in war. Spenser.

Their semblance kind, and mild their gestures were,
Peace in their hands, and friendship in their face. Fairfax.

All that fair and good in thy divine Semblance, and in thy beauty's heav'nly ray, United I behold. Milton.

SEMBLANT. adj. [semblant, Fr.] Like; resembling; having the appearance of any thing. Little used.

Thy picture, like thy fame,
Entire may last; that, as their eyes survey
The semblant shade, men yet unborn may say,
Thus great, thus gracious, look'd Britannia's queen;
Her brow thus smooth, her look was thus serene. Prior.

SE'MBLANT. n. f. Show; figure; resemblance; representation. Not in use.

Her purpose was not such as she did feign,
Ne yet her person such as it was seen;
But under simple shew, and semblant plain,
Lurks false Dueña, secretly unseen. Fairy Queen.

Full lively is the semblant, tho' the substance dead. Spenser.

SE'MBLATIVE. adj. [from semblant.] Suitable; accommodate; fit; resembling.

Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and ruby; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ shrill and sound;

And all is semblative a woman's part. Shakspeare.

To SEM'BLE. v. n. [sembler, Fr.] To represent; to make a likeness. Little used.

Let Europe, sav'd, the column high erect,
Than Trajan's higher, or than Antonine's,
Where sembling art may carve the fair effect
And full achievement of thy great designs. Prior.

SEMI. n. f. [Latin.] A word which, used in composition, signifies half: as, semicircle, half a circle.

SEMI'ANNULAR. adj. [semi, and annulus, a ring.] Half round.

Another boar tusk, somewhat slenderer, and of a semilunular figure. Grew.

SEMI-BREF. n. f. [semibreve, Fr.]

Semibref is a note in musick relating to time, and is the last in augmentation. It is commonly called the master-note, or measure-note, or time-note, as being of a certain determinate measure or length of time by itself; and all the other notes of augmentation and diminution are adjusted to its value. Harris.

He takes my hand, and as a still which stays

A semibref 'twixt each drop, he niggardly,
As loth to enrich me, so tells many a lye. Donne.

SEMICIRCLE. n. f. [semicirculus, Latin; semi and circle.] A half round; part of a circle divided by the diameter.

Black brows

Become some women best, so they be in a semicircle
Or a half moon, made with a pen. Shakspeare.

Has he given the lye

In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,

Or direct parallel? Shakspeare.

The chains that held my left leg gave me the liberty of walking backwards and forwards in a semicircle. Swift.

SEMICIRCLED. } adj. [semi and circu-

SEMICIRCULAR. } lar.] Half round.

The firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semicircled farthingale. Shakspeare.

The rainbow is caused by the rays of the sun falling upon a roid and opposite cloud, whereof some reflected, some refracted, beget the semicircular variety we call the rainbow. Brown.

The seas are inclosed between the two semicircular moles that surround it. Addison.

SEMICOLON. n. f. [semi and κῶλον.] Half a colon; a point made thus [;] to note a greater pause than that of a comma.

SEMI-DIAMETER. n. f. [semi and diameter.] Half the line which, drawn through the centre of a circle, divides it into two equal parts; a straight line drawn from the circumference to the centre of a circle.

Their difference is as little considerable as a semi-diameter of the earth in two measures of the highest heaven, the one taken from the surface of the earth, the other from its centre: the disproportion is just nothing. More.

The force of this instrument consists in the disproportion of distance betwixt the semidiameter of the cylinder and the semidiameter of the rundle with the spokes. Wilkins.

SEMI-DIAPHANEITY. n. f. [semi and diaphaneity.] Half transparency; imperfect transparency.

The transparency or semi-diaphaneity of the superficial corpuscles of bigger bodies, may have an interest in the production of their colours. Boyle.

SEMI-DIAPHANOUS. adj. [semi and diaphanous.] Half transparent; imperfectly transparent.

Another plate, finely variegated with a semi-diaphanous grey or sky, yellow and brown. Woodward.

SEMI-DOUBLE. n. f. [semi and double.] In the Romish breviary, such offices and feasts as are celebrated with less solemnity than the double ones, but yet with more than the single ones. Bailey.

SEMI-FLOSCULOUS. adj. [semi and flosculus, Lat.] Having a semifloret. Bailey.

SEMI-FLORET. n. f. [semi and floret.] Among florists, an half floret, which is tubulous at the beginning like a floret, and afterwards expanded in the form of a tongue. Bailey.

SEMI-FLUID. adj. [semi and fluid.] Imperfectly fluid.

Phlegm, or petuite, is a sort of semifluid; it being so far solid that one part draws along several other parts adhering to it, which doth not happen in a perfect fluid; and yet no part will draw the whole mass, as happens in a perfect solid. Arbuthnot.

SEMILUNAR. } adj. [semilunare, Fr.]

SEMILUNARY. } semi and luna, Latin.]

Resembling in form a half moon.

The eyes are guarded with a semilunar ridge. Grew.

SEMIMETAL. n. f. [semi and metal.] Half metal; imperfect metal.

Semimetals are metallic fossils, heavy, opaque, of a bright glittering surface, not malleable under the hammer; as quicksilver, antimony, cobalt, the arsenicks, bismuth, zink, with its ore calamine: to these may be added the semimetallick recrements, tutty and pampholyx. Hill.

SEMINAL. adj. [seminal, Fr. seminis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to feed.

2. Contained in the seed; radical.

Had our senses never presented us with those obvious seminal principles of apparent generations, we should never have suspected that a plant or animal would have proceeded from such unlikely materials. Glanville.

Though we cannot prolong the period of a commonwealth beyond the decree of heaven, or the date of its nature, any more than human life beyond the strength of the seminal virtue, yet we may manage a sickly constitution, and preserve a strong one. Swift.

SEMINALITY. n. f. [from semen, Lat.]

1. The nature of feed.

As though there were a seminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they conceive we behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown.

2. The power of being produced.

In the seeds of wheat there lieth obscurely the seminality of darnel. Brown.

SEMINARY. n. f. [seminaire, Fr. seminarium, from semino, Lat.]

1. The ground where any thing is sown to be afterward transplanted; seedplot.

Some, at the first transplanting trees out of their seminaries, cut them off about an inch from the ground, and plant them like quickset. Mortimer.

2. The place or original stock whence any thing is brought.

This stratum is expanded, serving for a common integument, and being the seminary or promptuary that furnisheth forth matter for the formation and increment of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

3. Seminal state.

The hand of God, who first created the earth, hath wisely contrived them in their proper seminaries, and where they best maintain the intention of their species. Brown.

4. Principle; causality.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, sooner than streams of nasty folks and beggars. Harvey.

5. Breeding-place; place of education, from which scholars are transplanted into life.

It was the seat of the greatest monarchy, and the seminary of the greatest men of the world, whilst it was heathen. Bacon.

The inns of court must be the worst instituted seminaries in any christian country. Swift.

SEMINATION. n. f. [from semino, Latin.] The act of sowing.

SEMINIFICAL. } adj. [semen and facio, Lat.]

SEMINIFICK. } Lat.] Productive of feed.

We are made to believe, that in the fourteenth year males are seminifical and pubescent; but he that shall inquire into the generality, will rather adhere unto Aristotle. Brown.

SEMINIFICATION. n. f. Propagation from the seed or seminal parts. Hale.

SEMIOPA'COUS. adj. [semi and opacus, Lat.] Half dark.

Semiopacous bodies are such as, looked upon in an ordinary light, and not held betwixt it and the eye, are not wont to be discriminated from the rest of the opacous bodies. Boyle.

SEMIORDINATE. n. f. [In conick sections.] A line drawn at right angles to, and bisected by, the axis, and reaching from one side of the section to another; the half of which is properly the semiordinate, but is now called the ordinate. Harris.

SEMIPE'DAL. adj. [semi and pedis, Latin.] Containing half a foot.

SEMIPELLUCID. adj. [semi and pellucidus, Latin.] Half clear; imperfectly transparent.

A light grey semipellucid flint, of much the same complexion with the common Indian agat. Woodward.

SEMI-PERSPICUOUS. adj. [semi and perspicuus, Latin.] Half transparent; imperfectly clear.

A kind of amethystine flint, not composed of crystals or grains; but one entire massy stone, semperspicuous, and of a pale blue, almost of the colour of some cows horns. Grew.

SEMI-PROOF. n. f. [semi and proof.] The proof of a single evidence. Bailey.

SEMIQUA'DRATE. } n. f. [In astronomy.]

SEMIQUA'RTILE. } An aspect of the planets when distant from each other forty-five degrees, or one sign and a half. Bailey.

SEMIQUINTILE. n. f. [In astronomy.] An aspect of the planets when at the distance of thirty-six degrees from one another. Bailey.

SEMISEX'TILE. n. f. [In astronomy.] A semisixth; an aspect of the planets when they are distant from each other one twelfth part of a circle, or thirty degrees. Bailey.

SEMI-SPHERICAL. adj. [semi and spherical.] Belonging to half a sphere. Bailey.

SEMI-SPHEROIDAL. adj. [semi and spheroidal.] Formed like a half spheroid.

SEMITERTIAN. n. f. [semi and tertian.] An ague compounded of a tertian and a quotidian. Bailey.

The natural product of such a cold moist year are tertians, semitertians, and some quartans. Arbuthnot.

SEMITONE. n. f. [semiton, Fr.] In musick, one of the degrees of concinuous intervals of concords. Bailey.

SEMI-VOWEL. n. f. [semi and vowel.] A consonant which makes an imperfect sound, or does not demand a total occlusion of the mouth.

When Homer would represent any agreeable object, he makes use of the smoothest vowels and most flowing semivowels. Broome.

SEMPERVIVE. n. f. [semper and vivus, Lat. that is, always alive.] A plant.

The greater sempervive will put out branches two or three years; but they wrap the root in an oil-cloth once in half a year. Bacon.

SEMPITERNAL. adj. [sempiternus, Fr. sempiternus, from semper and eternus, Latin.]

1. Eternal in futurity; having beginning, but no end.

SEN

Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, à parte ante, are not contented to suppose it to be sempiternal, or eternal à parte post; but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.

2. In poetry it is used simply for eternal.

Should we the long-depending scale ascend
Of sons and fathers will it never end?
If 'twill, then must we through the order run
To some one man whose being ne'er begun;
If that one man was sempiternal, why Did he, since independent, ever die? Blackmore.

SEMPITERNITY. n. f. [sempiternitas, Lat.] Future duration without end.

The future eternity or sempiternity of the world being admitted, though the eternity à parte ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the emanation of the divine goodness. Hale.

SE'MSTRESS. n. f. [reamerthe, Sax.] A woman whose business is to sew; a woman who lives by her needle.

Two hundred semsstresses were employed to make me shirts, and linen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds. Gulliver.

The tuck'd-up semsstresses walks with hasty strides. Swift.

SE'NARY. adj. [senarius, seni, Lat.] Belonging to the number six; containing six.SE'NATE. n. f. [senatus, Lat. senat, Fr.] An assembly of counsellors; a body of men set apart to consult for the publick good.

We debate
The nature of our seats, which will in time break ope
The locks o' th' senate, and bring in the crows
To peck the eagles. Shakspeare.

There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse. Milton.

He had not us'd excursions, spears, or darts,
But counsel, order, and such aged arts;
Which if our ancestors had not retain'd,
The senate's name our council had not gain'd. Denham.

Gallus was welcom'd to the sacred strand,
The senate rising to salute their guest. Dryden.

SE'NATEHOUSE. n. f. [senate and house.] Place of publick council.

The nobles in great earnestness are going
All to the senatehouse; some news is come. Shakspeare.

SE'NATOR. n. f. [senator, Lat. senateur, Fr.] A publick counsellor.

Most unwise patricians,
You grave but reckless senators. Shakspeare.
As if to ev'ry sop it might belong,
Like senators, to censure, right or wrong. Granville.

SENATO'RIAL. } adj. [senatorius, Latin;
SENATO'RIAN. } senatorial, senatorien,
Fr.] Belonging to senators; befitting senators.To SEND. v. a. pret. and part. pass. sent. [sandgan, Gothick; rendan, Saxon; senden, Dutch.]

1. To dispatch from one place to another: used both of persons and things.

He sent letters by posts on horseback. Esther.
His citizens sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us. Luke.

There have been commissions Sent down among them, which have flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties. Shakspeare.

My overshadowing spirit and might with thee
I send along. Milton.

To remove him I decree,
And send him from the garden forth to till
The ground whence he was taken, fitter soil. Milton.

SEN

His wounded men he first sends off to shore. Dryden.

Servants, sent on messages, stay out somewhat longer than the message requires. Swift.

2. To commission by authority to go and act.

I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran. Jeremiab.

But first, whom shall we send
In search of this new world? Here he had need
All circumspection, and we now no less Choice in our suffrage; for on whom we send
The weight of all and our last hope relies. Milton.

3. To transmit by another; not to bring.

They sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas. Acts.

4. To dismiss another as agent; not to go.

God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men
Delighted, and with frequent intercourse,
Thither will send his winged messengers
On errands of supernal grace. Milton.

5. To grant as from a distant place; as, if God send life.

I pray thee send me good speed this day, and shew kindness unto my master. Genesis.
O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me. Psalms.

6. To inflict, as from a distance.

The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto.
Deuteronomy.

7. To emit; to immit; to produce.

The water sends forth plants that have no roots fixed in the bottom, being almost but leaves. Bacon.

The senses send in only the influxes of material things, and the imagination and memory present only their pictures or images, when the objects themselves are absent. Cheyne.

8. To diffuse; to propagate.

Cherubic songs by night from neighb'ring hills
Aëreal music send. Milton.
When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the snaky tire went round:
The dreadful signal all the rocks rebound,
And through th' Achaian cities send the sound. Pope.

9. To let fly; to cast or shoot.

To SEND. v. n.

1. To dispatch a message.

I have made bold to send in to your wife:
My suit is that she will to Desdemona Procure me some access. Shakspeare.
This son of a murderer hath sent to take away
my head. Kings.

They could not attempt their perfect reformation in church and state, till those votes were utterly abolished; therefore they sent the same day again to the king. Clarendon.

2. To send for. To require by message to come, or cause to be brought.

Go with me, some few of you, and see the place;
and then you may send for your sick, which bring on land. Bacon.
He sent for me; and, while I rais'd his head,
He threw his aged arms about my neck,
And, seeing that I wept, he press'd me close. Dryden.

SE'NDER. n. f. [from send.] He that sends.

This was a merry message.
—We hope to make the sender blush at it. Shakspeare.

Love that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sour offence. Shakspeare.

Best with the best, the sender, not the sent. Milton.

SENE'SCENCE. n. f. [senesco, Lat.] The state of growing old; decay by time.

The earth and all things will continue in the state wherein they now are, without the least senescence or decay; without jarring, disorder, or invasion of one another, Woodward.

SEN

SE'NESCHAL. n. f. [seneschal, Fr. of uncertain original.]

1. One who had in great houses the care of feasts or domestick ceremonies.

John earl of Huntingdon, under his seal of arms, made sir John Arundel, of Trevice, seneschal of his household, as well in peace as in war. Carew.
Marshall'd feast,
Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals;
The skill of artifice, or office, mean! Milton.

The seneschal rebuk'd in haste withdrew;
With equal haste a menial train pursue. Pope.

2. It afterward came to signify other offices.

SE'NGREEN. n. f. [sedum.] A plant.SE'NILE. adj. [senilis, Lat.] Belonging to old age; consequent on old age.

My green youth made me very unripe for a talk of that nature, whose difficulty requires that it should be handled by a person in whom nature, education, and time, have happily matched a senile maturity of judgment with youthful vigour of fancy. Boyle.

SE'NIOR. n. f. [senior, Lat.]

1. One older than another; one who, on account of longer time, has some superiority.

How can you admit your seniors to the examination or allowing of them, not only being inferior in office and calling, but in gifts also? Whitgift.

2. An aged person.

A senior of the place replies,
Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden.

SENIORITY. n. f. [from senior.] Elder-ship; priority of birth.

As in insurrections the ringleader is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has, by his seniority and primogeniture, a double portion of the guilt. Govern. of the Tongue.
He was the elder brother, and Ulysses might be consigned to his care by the right due to his seniority. Broome.

SE'NNA. n. f. [sena, Lat.] A physical tree. Miller.

What rhubarb, senna, or what purgative drug,
Would scour these English hence? Shakspeare.
Senna tree is of two sorts; the bastard senna, and the scorpion senna; both which yield a pleasant leaf and flower. Mortimer.

SE'NNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from seven-night.] The space of seven nights and days; a week. See FORTNIGHT.

If mention is made, on Monday, of Thursday sennight, the Thursday that follows the next Thursday, is meant.

Time trots hard with a young maid between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized:
if the interim be but a se'nnight, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years. Shakspeare.

SENO'ULAR. adj. [seni and oculus, Lat.] Having six eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders octonocular, and some senocular. Derham.

SENSA'TION. n. f. [sensation, Fr. sensatio, school Lat.] Perception by means of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances, vary the sensations; and to them of Java pepper is cold. Glanville.

The brain, distempered by a cold, beating against the root of the auditory nerve, and protracted to the tympanum, causes the sensation of noise. Harvey.

This great source of most of the ideas we have, depending wholly upon our senses, and derived by them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke.

When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Addison.

The happiest, upon a fair estimate, have stronger sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SENSE. n. f. [sens, Fr. sensus, Lat.]

1. Faculty or power by which external objects are perceived; the sight, touch, hearing, smell, taste.

This pow'r is sense, which from abroad doth bring

The colour, taste, and touch, and scent, and sound,
The quantity and shape of ev'ry thing

Within earth's centre or heav'n's circle found:

And though things sensible be numberless,

But only five the sense's organs be;

And in those five all things their forms express,

Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear, or see.

Davies.

Then is the soul a nature, which contains

The pow'r of sense within a greater pow'r,

Which doth employ and use the sense's pains;

But fits and rules within her private bow'r. Davies.

Both contain

Within them ev'ry lower faculty

Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste. Milton.

Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the senses of learning, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs; and these are hearing and seeing. Holder.

2. Perception by the senses; sensation.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcurfion throughout the whole. Bacon.

If we had nought but sense, then only they Should have found minds which have their senses found;

But wisdom grows when senses do decay,
And folly most in quickest sense is found. Davies.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind.

Dryden.

3. Perception of intellect; apprehension of mind.

This Basilus, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension. Sidney.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heav'n from earth so far. Milton.

4. Sensibility; quickness or keenness of perception.

He should have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge.

Shakspeare.

5. Understanding; soundness of faculties; strength of natural reason.

Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses.

Shakspeare.

God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities which we call natural light and reason, and common sense. Bentley.

There's something previous ev'n to taste; 'tis
sense,

Good sense, which only is the gift of heaven,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven:

A light within yourself you must perceive;
Jones and Le Nôtre have it not to give. Pope.

6. Reason; reasonable meaning.

He raves; his words are loose
As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense:

You see he knows not me, his natural father;
That now the wind is got into his head,
And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryden.

7. Opinion; notion; judgment.

I speak my private but impartial sense
With freedom, and, I hope, without offence.

Roscommon.

8. Consciousness; conviction.

In the due sense of my want of learning, I only make a confession of my own faith. Dryden.

9. Moral perception.

Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices. L'Estrange.

10. Meaning; import.

In this sense, to be preserved from sin is not impossible. Hooker.

My hearty friends,
You take me in too dolorous a sense. Shakspeare.

A haughty presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves. More.

All before Richard is before time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.

In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of christianity. Tillotson.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and affix the other senses or ideas to other words.

Watts.

SE'NSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. Not in use.

Let the sciolist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them: is he sure that objects are not otherwise sensed by others, than they are by him? And why must his sense be the infallible criterion? It may be, what is white to us, is black to negroes. Glanville.

SE'NSEFUL. adj. [from sense and full.] Reasonable; judicious. Not used.

Men, otherwise senseful and ingenious, quote such things out of an author as would never pass in conversation. Norris.

SE'NSELESS. adj. [from sense.]

1. Wanting sense; wanting life; void of all life or perception.

The charm and venom which they drunk
Their blood with secret filth infected hath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk,
That through the great contagion direful deadly stunk. Fairy Queen.

The ears are senseless that should give us hearing,
To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd. Shaksp.

You blocks! you worse than senseless things!

Shakspeare.

It is as repugnant to the idea of senseless matter, that it should put into itself sense, perception, and knowledge, as it is repugnant to the idea of a triangle, that it should put into itself greater angles than two right ones. Locke.

2. Unfeeling; wanting sympathy.

The senseless grave feels not your pious sorrows.

Ruwe.

3. Unreasonable; stupid; doltish; blockish.

They would repent this their senseless perverseness when it would be too late, and when they found themselves under a power that would destroy them. Clarendon.

If we be not extremely foolish, thankless, or senseless, a great joy is more apt to cure sorrow than a great trouble is. Taylor.

The great design of this author's book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world was ever so senseless as to deny. Tillotson.

She saw her favour was misplac'd;
The fellows had a wretched taste;

She needs must tell them to their face,
They were a senseless stupid race. Swift.

4. Contrary to true judgment; contrary to reason.

It is a senseless thing, in reason, to think that one of these interests can stand without the other, when, in the very order of natural causes, government is preserved by religion. Soutb.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, little wiser than they, destroy their young by senseless fondness, and too much embracing. Locke.

5. Wanting sensibility; wanting quickness or keenness of perception. Not in use.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolitus, with an effeminate countenance, or that hot-spurred Harpalice in Virgil, proceedeth from a senseless and over-cold judgment. Peacbam.

6. Wanting knowledge; unconscious: with of.

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep,
Fatten'd in vice; so callous and so gross,
He sins and fees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

Hear this,
You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines,
Senseless of any charm in love, beyond
The prostitution of a common bed. Southern.

SE'NSELESSLY. adv. [from senseless.] In a senseless manner; stupidly; unreasonably.

If any one should be found so senselessly arrogant as to suppose man alone knowing and wise, but yet the product of mere ignorance and chance, and that all the rest of the universe acted only by that blind hap-hazard, I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Tully. Locke.

SE'NSELESSNESS. n. f. [from senseless.]

Folly; unreasonableness; absurdity;

stupidity.

The senselessness of the tradition of the crocodile's moving his upper jaw, is plain, from the articulation of the occiput with the neck, and the nether jaw with the upper. Grew.

SENSIBILITY. n. f. [sensibilité, French.]

1. Quickness of sensation.

2. Quickness of perception; delicacy.

Modesty is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul; it is such an exquisite sensibility, as warns a woman to shun the first appearance of every thing hurtful. Addison.

SE'NSIBLE. adj. [sensible, Fr. sensilis, Lat.]

1. Having the power of perceiving by the senses.

Would your cambrick were as sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity.

Shakspeare.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects those that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

A blind man conceives not colours, but under the notion of some other sensible faculty. Glanville.

2. Perceptible by the senses.

By reason man attaineth unto the knowledge of things that are and are not sensible: it resteth, therefore, that we search how man attaineth unto the knowledge of such things unsensible as are to be known. Hooker.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle tow'rd my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still:

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight? Shakspeare.

The space left and acquired in every sensible moment in such slow progressions, is so inconsiderable, that it cannot possibly move the sense. Glanville.

It is manifest that the heavens are void of all sensible resistance, and by consequence of all sensible matter. Norris.

The greater part of men are no otherwise moved than by sense, and have neither leisure nor ability so to improve their power of reflection, as to be capable of conceiving the divine perfections, without the assistance of sensible objects. Rogers.

Air is sensible to the touch by its motion, and by its resistance to bodies moved in it. Arbutnot.

3. Perceived by the mind.

Idleness was punished by so many stripes in publick, and the disgrace was more sensible than the pain. Temple.

4. Perceiving by either mind or senses; having perception by the mind or senses.

This must needs remove

The sensible of pain. Milton.

I saw you in the east at your first arising: I was as soon sensible as any of that light, when just shooting out, and beginning to travel upwards to the meridian. Dryden.

I do not say there is no soul in man, because he is not sensible of it in his sleep; but I do say, he cannot think at any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it. Locke.

The verification is as beautiful as the description, complete; every ear must be sensible of it. Broome.

5. Having moral perception; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so great a shew of zeal. Shaksp.

6. Having quick intellectual feeling; being easily or strongly affected.

SEN

Even I, the bold, the sensible of wrong,
 Restrain'd by shame, was forc'd to hold my tongue.
Dryden.

7. Convinced; persuaded. A low use.

They are very sensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatick; for then their territories would have lain together.
Addison.

8. In low conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonable; judicious; wise.

I have been tired with accounts from sensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge.
Addison.

SENSIBLENESS. n. s. [from sensible.]

1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses.

2. Actual perception by mind or body.

3. Quickness of perception; sensibility.

The sensibleness of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp medica-ments.
Shakspeare.

4. Painful consciousness.

There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate sinner, being a kind of numbness of soul; and, contrariwise, this feeling and sensibleness, and sorrow for sin, the most vital quality.
Hammond.

5. Judgment; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation.

SENSIBLY. adv. [from sensible.]

1. Perceptibly to the senses.

He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed
 Of that self-blood that first gave life to you.
Shakspeare.
 A sudden pain in my right foot increased sensibly.
Temple.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive; and so they affect the fibres of the brain more sensibly than other parts.
Arbutnot.

2. With perception of either mind or body.

3. Externally; by impression on the senses.

That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ.
Hooker.

4. With quick intellectual perception.

5. [In low language.] Judiciously; rea- sonably.

SENSITIVE. adj. [sensitif, Fr.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated so as not to fall into sin, yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God: this is a piece of human frailty.
Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in painting called passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body suffers and is sensibly altered.
Dryden.

Bodies are such as are endued with a vegetative soul, as plants; a sensitive soul, as animals; or a rational soul, as the body of man.
Ray.

SENSITIVE Plant. n. s. [mimosa, Lat.] A plant.

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having many stamina in the centre:
 these flowers are collected into a round head: from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat-jointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partion one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the pedicle of their leaves falls downward; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted.
Miller.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation.
Locke.

SEN

Whence does it happen that the plant, which well
 We name the sensitive, should move and feel?
 Whence know her leaves to answer her command,
 And with quick horror fly the neighb'ring hand?
Prior.

The sensitive plant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks.
Mortimer.

SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner.

The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior objects than towards God: this is a piece of frailty.
Hammond.

SENSORIUM. } n. s. [Latin.] SENSORY. }

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensories, though they move not any other body.
Bacon.

As sound in a bell, or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensorium 'tis a sense of that motion under the form of sound.
Newton.

Is not the sensory of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensible species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance?
Newton.

2. Organ of sensation.

That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism.
Bentley.

SENSUAL. adj. [sensual, French.]

1. Consisting in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses.

Men in general are too partial in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it.
L'Estrange.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
 The scale of sensual, mental pow'rs ascends.
Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spi- ritual.

The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatsoever is most divine.
Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious.

From amidst them rose
 Belial, the dissolute spirit that fell;
 The sensuallest, and after Asmodai
 The fleshliest, incubus.
Milton.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein sensual men place their felicity.
Arbutnot.

SENSUALIST. n. s. [from sensual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporal pleasures.

Let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able; the former of which will find, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose hers.
South.

SENSUALITY. n. s. [from sensual.] De- votedness to the senses; addiction to brutal and corporal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood
 Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
 That rage in savage sensuality.
Shakspeare.

Kill not her quick'ning pow'r with surfeitings;
 Mar not her sense with sensuality:
 Cast not her serious wit on idle things;
 Make not her free-will slave to vanity.
Davies.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is.
South.

They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings.
Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchus had their temples.
Bentley.

TO SENSUALIZE. v. a. [from sensual.]

SEN

To sink to sensual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses.

Not to suffer one's self to be sensualized by pleasures, like those who were changed into brutes by Circe.
Pope.

SENSUALLY. adv. [from sensual.] In a sensual manner.

SENSUOUS. adj. [from sense.] Tender; pathetic; full of passion. Not in use.

To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less subtle and fine; but more simple, sensuous, and passionate.
Milton.

SENT. The participle passive of send.

I make a decree that all Israel go with thee; for-asmuch as thou art sent of the king.
Ezra.

SENTENCE. n. s. [sentence, Fr. sententia, Latin.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge civil or criminal.

The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sentence that reason giveth, concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do.
Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that so pronounceth of them, neither sentence of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proof, that they, in whose hands it is to alter them, may likewise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity.
Hooker.

How will I give sentence against them.
Jeremiah.

If matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, still there are other lenitives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sentence.
South.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we may pass sentence upon his doctrines.
Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom.

By the consent of all laws, in capital causes, the evidence must be full and clear; and if so, where one man's life is in question, what say we to a war, which is ever the sentence of death upon many?
Bacon.

What rests but that the mortal sentence pass?
Milton.

3. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral.

A sentence may be defined a moral instruction couched in a few words.
Broome.

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding,
 and shewing of hard sentences were found in Daniel.
Daniel.

TO SENTENCE. v. a. [sentencier, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To pass the last judgment on any one.

After this cold consid'rance, sentence me;
 And, as you are a king, speak in your state,
 What I have done that misbecame my place.
Shakspeare.
 Came the mild judge and intercessor both
 To sentence man.
Milton.

2. To condemn; to doom to punishment.

Could that decree from our brother come?
 Nature herself is sentenc'd in your doom:
 Piety is no more.
Dryden.
 Idleness, sentenced by the decurions, was punished
 by so many stripes.
Temple.

SENTENTIOSITY. n. s. [from sententious.] Comprehension in a sentence.

Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententiousity of common conceit with us.
Brown.

SENTENTIOUS. adj. [sentencieux, Fr. from sentence.]

1. Abounding with sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetick.

He is very swift and sententious.
Shakspeare.
 Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues:
Sententious showers! O let them fall!
 Their cadence is rhetorical.
Crashaw.

Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms,
 Foretold us useful and sententious truth.
Waller.

How he apes his fire,
 Ambitiously sententious!
Addison.

2. Comprising sentences.

The making of figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them, as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain.

SENTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from sententious.]

In short sentences; with striking brevity.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath.

Nausicaa delivers her judgment sententiously, to give it more weight.

SENTENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sententious.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength.

The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy.

SENTINERY. n. f. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.] One who is to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army.

What strength, what art, can then suffice, or what evasion bear him safe Through the strict sentries, and stations thick Of angels watching round?

SENTIENT. adj. [sentient, Lat.] Perceiving; having perception.

This acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horse is under the sense of hunger, and that, without any formal syllogism, presseth him to eat.

SENTIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] He that has perception.

If the sentient be carried, passibus æquis, with the body whose motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is insensible.

SENTIMENT. n. f. [sentiment, Fr.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion.

The consideration of the reason why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries.

Alike to council or th' assembly came, With equal souls and sentiments the same.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sentence in a composition.

Those who could no longer defend the conduct of Cato, praised the sentiments.

SENTINEL. n. f. [sentinelle, Fr. from sentio, Lat.] One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprise.

Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge; Use careful watch, chuse trusty sentinels.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another; so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends, it commonly comes to the king's ear.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing pow'r, Stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel,

Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tow'r; And though both see, yet both but one thing tell.

Love to our citadel resorts, Through those deceitful fallports;

Our sentinels betray our forts.

The senses are situated in the head, as sentinels in a watch-tower, to receive and convey to the soul the impressions of external objects.

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unsoldierlike.

SENTRY. n. f. [corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.]

1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprise.

VOL. II.

If I do send, dispatch

Those sentries to our aid; the rest will serve For a short holding.

The youth of hell strict guard may keep, And set their sentries to the utmost deep.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow, A wakeful sentry, and on duty now.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentinel.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep, O'er my slumbers sentry keep;

Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes, Whose eyes are open while mine close.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep.

SEPARABILITY. n. f. [from separable.]

The quality of admitting disunion or discription.

Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction.

The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation; for nothing can be separated from itself.

SEPARABLE. adj. [separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separate.]

1. Susceptive of disunion; discriptible.

The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood.

2. Possible to be disjoined from something: with from.

Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that tho' they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another.

SEPARABLENESS. n. f. [from separable.] Capableness of being separated.

Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold.

TO SEPARATE. v. a. [separo, Lat. separer, Fr.]

1. To break; to divide into parts.

2. To disunite; to disjoin.

I'll to England.

To Ireland, I: our separated fortunes Shall keep us both the safer.

Rather than death, or aught than death more dread, Shall separate us.

3. To sever from the rest.

Can a body be inflammable, from which it would puzzle a chymist to separate an inflammable ingredient?

Death from sin no power can separate.

4. To set apart; to segregate.

Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them.

David separated to the service those who should prophesy.

5. To withdraw.

Separate thyself from me: if thou wilt take the left, I will go to the right.

TO SEPARATE. v. n. To part; to be disunited.

When there was not room enough for their herds to feed, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture.

SEPARATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Divided from the rest; parted from another.

'Twere hard to conceive an eternal watch, whose pieces were never separate one from another, nor ever in any other form.

2. Disjoined; withdrawn.

Eve separate he wish'd.

3. Secret; secluded.

In a secret vale the Trojan sees A separate grove.

4. Disunited from the body; disengaged from corporeal nature. An emphatical sense.

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it can retain without the help of the body too; or else the soul or any separate spirit, will have but little advantage by thinking.

SEPARATELY. adv. [from separate.] Apart; singly; not in union; distinctly; particularly.

It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their council both separately and together; for private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reserved.

If you admit of many figures, conceive the whole together, and not every thing separately and in particular.

SEPARATENESS. n. f. [from separate.] The state of being separate.

SEPARATION. n. f. [separatio, Lat. separation, Fr. from separate.]

1. The act of separating; disjunction.

They have a dark opinion, that the soul doth live after the separation from the body.

Any part of our bodies, vitally united to that which is conscious in us, makes a part of ourselves; but upon separation from the vital union, by which that consciousness is communicated, that, which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so.

2. The state of being separate; disunion.

As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language was a mark of union.

3. The chymical analysis, or operation of disuniting things mingled.

A fifteenth part of silver, incorporated with gold, will not be recovered by any matter of separation, unless you put a greater quantity of silver, which is the last refuge in separations.

4. Divorce; disjunction from a married state.

Did you not hear A buzzing of a separation Between the king and Cath'rine?

SEPARATIST. n. f. [separatiste, Fr. from separate.] One who divides from the church; a schismatick; a seceder.

The anabaptists, separatists, and sectaries tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy.

Our modern separatists pronounce all those heretical, or carnal, from whom they have withdrawn.

Says the separatist, if those, who have the rule over you, should command you any thing about church affairs, you ought not, in conscience, to obey them.

SEPARATOR. n. f. [from separate.] One who divides; a divider.

SEPARATORY. adj. [from separate.] Used in separation.

The most conspicuous gland of an animal is the system of the guts, where the lacteals are the emissary vessels, or separatory ducts.

SEPT. n. f. [septum, Lat.] A clan; a race; a family; a generation. A word used only with regard or allusion to Ireland, and, I suppose, Irish.

This judge, being the lord's brehon, adjudgeth a better share unto the lord of the soil, or the head of that sept, and also unto himself for his judgment a greater portion, than unto the plaintiffs.

The English forces were ever too weak to subdue so many warlike nations, or septs, of the Irish, as did possess this island.

The true and ancient Russians, a sept whom he had met with in one of the provinces of that vast empire, were white like the Danes.

SEPTANGULAR. adj. [septem and angulus, Lat.] Having seven corners or sides.

SEPTEMBER. n. s. [Lat. Septembre, Fr.] The ninth month of the year; the seventh from March.

September hath his name as being the seventh month from March: he is drawn with a merry and cheerful countenance, in a purple robe. Peacocks.

SEPTENARY. adj. [septenarius, Latin.] Consisting of seven.

Every controversy has seven questions belonging to it; though the order of nature seems too much neglected by a confinement to this septenary number. Watts.

SEPTE'NARY. n. s. The number seven.

The days of men are cast up by septenaries, and every seventh year conceived to carry some altering character in temper of mind or body. Brown.

These constitutions of Moses, that proceed so much upon a septenary, or number of seven, have no reason in the nature of the thing. Burnet.

SEPTE'NNIAL. adj. [septennius, Lat.]

1. Lasting seven years.

2. Happening once in seven years.

Being once dispensed with for his septennial visit, by a holy instrument from Petropolis, he resolved to govern them by subaltera ministers. Howel.

SEPTE'NTRION. n. s. [Fr. septentrion, Lat.] The north.

Thou art as opposite to every good

As the antipodes are unto us,

Or as the south to the septentrion. Shakspeare.

SEPTE'NTRION. } adj. [septentrionalis,

SEPTE'NTRIONAL. } Lat. septentrional, Fr.] Northern.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That screen'd the fruits of th' earth and seats of men

From cold septentrion blasts. Milton.

If the spring

Preceding should be destitute of rain,

Or blast septentrional with brushing wings

Sweep up the smoky mists and vapours damp,

Then woe to mortals. Philips.

SEPTE'NTRIONALITY. n. s. [from septentrional.] Northerliness.

SEPTE'NTRIONALLY. adv. [from septentrional.] Toward the north; northerly.

If they be powerfully excited, and equally let fall, they commonly sink down, and break the water, at that extreme whereat they were septentrionally excited. Brown.

To SEPTE'NTRIONATE. v. n. [from septentrion, Lat.] To tend northerly.

Steel and good iron, never excited by the load-stone, septentrionate at one extreme, and australize at another. Brown.

SEPTICAL. adj. [σπυλικός.] Having power to promote or produce putrefaction.

As a septical medicine, Galen commended the ashes of a salamander. Brown.

SEPTILATERAL. adj. [septem and lateris, Lat.] Having seven sides.

By an equal interval they make seven triangles, the bases whereof are the seven sides of a septilateral figure, described within a circle. Brown.

SEPTUAGENARY. adj. [septuagenarius, Lat. septuagenaire, Fr.] Consisting of seventy.

The three hundred years of John of times, or Nestor, cannot afford a reasonable encouragement beyond Moses's septuagenary determination. Brown.

SEPTUAGESIMAL. adj. [septuagesimus, Lat.] Consisting of seventy.

In our abridged and septuagesimal age, it is very rare to behold the fourth generation. Brown.

SEPTUAGINT. n. s. [septuaginta, Latin.]

The old Greek version of the Old Testament, so called as being supposed the work of seventy-two interpreters.

Which way soever you try, you shall find the product great enough for the extent of this earth;

and if you follow the septuagint chronology, it will still be far higher. Burnet.

SEPTUPLE. adj. [septuplex, Lat.] Seven times as much. A technical term.

SEPULCHRAL. adj. [sepulchral, Fr. sepulchralis, from sepulchrum, Lat.] Relating to burial; relating to the grave; monumental.

Whilst our souls negotiate there,

We like sepulchral statues lay;

All day the same our postures were,

And we laid nothing all the day. Donne.

Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,

That was the casket of heav'n's richest store. Milton.

Sepulchral lyes our holy walls to grace,

And new-year odes. Pope.

SEPULCHRE. n. s. [sepulchre, Fr. sepulchrum, Lat.] A grave; a tomb.

To entail him and 's heirs unto the crown,

What is it but to make thy sepulchre? Shakspeare.

Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king. Bacon.

There, where the virgin's son his doctrine taught,
His miracles, and our redemption wrought;
Where I, by thee inspir'd, his praises sung,
And on his sepulchre my offering hung. Sandys.

Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients. Wilkins.

If not one common sepulchre contains

Our bodies, or one urn our last remains,

Yet Ceyx and Alecyone shall join. Dryden.

To SEPULCHRE. v. a. [from the noun.] It is accented on the second syllable by Shakspeare and Milton; on the first, more properly, by Jonson and Prior.] To bury; to entomb.

Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;

Or, at the least, in hers sepulchre thine. Shaksp.

I am glad to see that time survive,

Where merit is not sepulchred alive;

Where good men's virtues them to honours bring,

And not to dangers. Ben Jonson.

Thou so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie,

That kings for such a tomb would wish to die. Milton.

Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,

And, deep furcharg'd, by sandy mountains lie

Obscurely sepulchred. Prior.

SEPULTURE. n. s. [sepulture, Fr. sepultura, Lat.] Interment; burial.

That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepulture a marble tomb of her own. Brown.

Where we may royal sepulture prepare;

With speed to Melefinda bring relief,

Recal her spirits, and moderate her grief. Dryden.

In England, sepulture or burial of the dead may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased. Ayliffe.

SEQUACIOUS. adj. [sequacis, Lat.]

1. Following; attendant.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,

And trees uprooted left their place,

Sequacious of the lyre;

But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher:

When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,

An angel heard,

And straight appear'd,

Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

Above those superstitious horrors that enslave

The fond sequacious herd, to mystick faith

And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few

The glorious stranger hail. Thomson.

2. Ductile; pliant.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded. Ray.

SEQUACITY. n. s. [from sequax, Latin.]

Ductility; toughness.

Matter, whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeness, lentor, and sequacity. Bacon.

SE'QUEL. n. s. [sequelle, Fr. sequella, Lat.]

1. Conclusion; succeeding part.

If black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach

Attend the sequel of your imposition,

Your meek enforcement shall acquittance me. Shakspeare.

Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor: but was he not also successful? True, but still he was poor: grant this, and you cannot keep off that unavoidable sequel in the next verse, the poor man's wisdom is despised. South.

2. Consequence; event.

Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fail, or swerve, and who doth not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would be ruin both to itself and whatsoever dependeth on it? Hooker.

In these he put two weights,

The sequel each of parting and of fight. Milton.

3. Consequence inferred; consequentialness.

What sequel is there in this argument? An arch-deacon is the chief deacon: ergo, he is only a deacon. Whitgift.

SE'QUENCE. n. s. [from sequor, Lat.]

1. Order of succession. An elegant word, but little used.

How art thou a king,

But by fair sequence and succession? Shakspeare.

2. Series; arrangement; method.

The cause proceedeth from a precedent sequence, and series of the seasons of the year. Bacon.

SE'QUENT. adj. [sequens, Latin.]

1. Following; succeeding.

Let my trial be mine own confession:

Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,

Is all the grace I beg. Shakspeare.

There he dies, and leaves his race

Growing into a nation; and now grown

Subjected to a sequent king, who seeks

To stop their overgrowth. Milton.

2. Consequential.

SE'QUENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] A follower. Not in use.

Here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which accidentally miscarried. Shakspeare.

To SEQUE'STER. v. a. [sequester, Fr. secrestar, Spanish; sequestro, low Latin.]

1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train? Shakspeare.

To the which place a poor sequester'd stag,

That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,

Did come to languish. Shakspeare.

In shady bow'r

More sacred and sequester'd, though but feign'd,

Pan or Sylvanus never slept. Milton.

Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possess,

Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions bless,

Bear me, oh bear me, to sequester'd scenes

Of bow'ry mazes, and surrounding greens. Pope.

2. To put aside; to remove.

Although I had wholly sequester'd my civil affairs, yet I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair. Bacon.

3. To withdraw; to segregate.

A thing as seasonable in grief as in joy, as decent being added unto actions of greatest weight and solemnity, as being used when men most sequester themselves from action. Hooker.

4. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others: as, his annuity is sequestered to pay his creditors.

5. To deprive of possessions.

It was his taylor and his cook, his fine fashions and his French ragouts, which sequestered him; and, in a word, he came by his poverty as sinfully as some usually do by their riches. South.

SEQUESTRABLE. adj. [from sequestrate.]

1. Subject to privation.

2. Capable of separation.

Hartshorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not uneasily sequestrable salt. Boyle.

SEQUESTRATE. v. n. To sequester; to separate.

In general contagions, more perish for want of necessities than by the malignity of the disease, they being sequestered from mankind. Arbuthnot.

SEQUESTRATION. n. f. [sequestration, French; from sequester.]

1. Separation; retirement.

His addiction was to courses vain;
I never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity. Shakespeare.

There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a sequestration of a man's self from the noise of the world; for truth seems to be seen by eyes much fixt upon inferior objects. South.

2. Disunion; disjunction.

The metals remain unsevered, the fire only dividing the body into smaller particles, hindering rest and continuity, without any sequestration of elementary principles. Boyle.

3. State of being set aside.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had. Shakspeare.

4. Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.

If there be a single spot in the glebe more barren, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of sequestration. Swift.

SEQUESTRA'TOR. n. f. [from sequester.] One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.

I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators, and they have taken all from me. Taylor.

SERAPLIO. n. f. [Italian; perhaps of oriental original. The g is lost in the pronunciation.] A house of women kept for debauchery.

There is a great deal more solid content to be found in a constant course of well living, than in the voluptuousness of a seraglio. Norris.

SERAPH. n. f. [שֵׁרָפִים] One of the orders of angels.

He is infinitely more remote, in the real excellency of his nature, from the highest and perfectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most contemptible part of matter, and consequently must infinitely exceed what our narrow understandings can conceive of him. Locke.

As full, as perfect, in vile man that mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns. Pope.

SERAPHICAL. } adj. [seraphique, French; SERAPHICK. } from seraph.]

1. Angelick; angelical.

Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of angelical purity, of perfect innocence, and seraphical fervour. Taylor.

Seraphick arms and trophies. Milton.

2. Pure; refined from sensuality.

'Tis to the world a secret yet,
Whether the nymph, to please her swain,
Talks in a high romantick strain;
Or whether he at last descends
To like with less seraphick ends. Swift.

SERAPHIM. n. f. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have s added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.

To thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry. Common Prayer.

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand. Isaiah.

Of seraphim another row. Milton.

SERE. adj. [reapian, Saxon, to dry.] Dry; withered; no longer green. See SEAR.

The muses, that were wont green bays to wear,
Now bringen bitter elder-branches seré. Spenser.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and seré, Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where;
Vicious, ungentle. Shakspeare.

Ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected may with matter seré foment. Milton.
'They seré wood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke. Dryden.

On a seré branch,
Low bending to the bank, I sat me down,
Musing and still. Rowe.

SERE. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except from this passage, the meaning. Can it come, like sheers, from reynan, Saxon, to cut?] Claw; talon.

Two eagles,
That mounted on the wings, together still
Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the council, over every brow Shook their thick wings, and threat'ning death's cold fears,
Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager seres. Chapman.

SERENADE. n. f. [serenade, French; serenata, Italian; whence, in Milton, serenate, from serenus, Latin; the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights.] Musick or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.

Mixt dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
Or serenate, which the starv'd lover sings
To his proud fair; best quitted with disdain. Milton.

Foolish swallow, what dost thou
So often at my window do,
With thy tuneless serenade? Cowley.

Shall I the neighbours nightly rest invade,
At her deaf doors, with some vile serenade? Dryd.
Will fancies he never should have been the man
he is, had not he broke windows, and disturbed honest people with his midnight serenades, when he was a young fellow. Addison.

TO SERENADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with nocturnal musick.

He continued to serenade her every morning, till the queen was charmed with his harmony. Spectat.

SERENE. adj. [seren, French; serenus, Latin.]

1. Calm; placid; quiet.

Spirits live inspher'd
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

2. Unruffled; undisturbed; even of temper; peaceful or calm of mind; showing a calm mind.

There wanted yet a creature might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.
Exciting them, by a due remembrance of all that is past, unto future circumspection, and a serene expectation of the future life. Grew.

GUTTA-SERENA. n. f. An obstruction in the optic nerve.

These eyes that roll in vain,
So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs. Milton.

SERENE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A calm damp evening.

Wherever death doth please t' appear,
Seas, serenes, swords, shot, sickness, all are there. Ben Jonson.

TO SERENE. v. a. [serener, Fr. sereno, Latin.]

1. To calm; to quiet.

2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.

Take care
Thy muddy bev'rage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baser rosy lees. Philips.

SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]

1. Calmly; quietly.

The setting sun now shone serenely bright. Pope.

2. With unruffled temper; coolly.

Whatever practical rule is generally broken, cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men would, without shame or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair:
Soft fell her words as flew the air. Prior.

SERENENESS. n. f. [from serene.] Serenity.

SERENITUDE. n. f. [from serene.] Calmness; coolness of mind. Not in use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour will flow quietude and serenitude in the affections. Wotton.

SERENITY. n. f. [serenité, French; from serenus, Latin.]

1. Calmness; mild temperature.

In the constitution of a perpetual equinox, the best part of the globe would be desolate; and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reason to expect that it would constantly enjoy that admired calm and serenity. Bentley.

Pure serenity apace
Induces thought, and contemplation still. Thomson.

2. Peace; quietness; not disturbance.

A general peace and serenity newly succeeded a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.

3. Evenness of temper; coolness of mind.

I cannot see how any men should ever transgress those moral rules, with confidence and serenity, were they innate, and stamped upon their minds. Locke.

SERGE. n. f. [serge, French; xerxa, Spanish, which Covarruvias derives from xirica, Arabick; Skinner from serge, German, a mat.] A kind of woollen cloth.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kersey or serge, and another into arras. Hale.

Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,
And bid broad-cloths and serges grow. Gay.

SERGEANT. n. f. [sergent, Fr. sergente, Italian, from serviens, Latin.]

1. An officer whose business it is to execute the commands of magistrates.

Had I but time, as this fell sergeant, Death,
Is strict in his arrest, oh! I could tell. Shakspeare.
When it was day, the magistrates sent the sergeants, saying, Let these men go. Addison.

2. A petty officer in the army.

This is the sergeant,
Who like a good and hardy soldier fought. Shakspeare.

3. A lawyer of the highest rank under a judge.

None should be made sergeants, but such as probably might be held fit to be judges afterwards. Bacon.

4. It is a title given to some of the king's servants: as, sergeant chirurgeon; that is, a chirurgeon servant to the king.

SERGEANTRY. n. f. [from sergeant.]

Grand sergeantry is that where one holdeth lands of the king by service, which he ought to do in his own person unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his spear, or to lead his host, or to be his marshal, or to blow a horn, when he seeth his enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four seas, or else to do it himself; or to bear the king's sword before him at his coronation, or on that day to be his sewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit sergeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly some small thing toward his wars; as a sword, dagger, bow, knife, spear, pair of gloves of mail, a pair of spurs, or such like. Cowell.

SERGEANTSHIP. n. s. [from sergeant.]
The office of a sergeant.

SERIES. n. s. [serie, Fr. series, Latin.]

1. Sequence; order.

Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text, as it lies in the series of the epistle.

The chafms of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series.

2. Succession; course.

This is the series of perpetual woe,
Which thou, alas! and thine are born to know.

SERIOUS. adj. [serieux, Fr. serius, Lat.]

1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behaviour.

Ah! my friends! while we laugh, all things are serious round about us: God is serious, who exerciseth patience towards us; Christ is serious, who shed his blood for us; the Holy Ghost is serious, who striveth against the obstinacy of our hearts; the holy scriptures bring to our ears the most serious things in the world; the holy sacraments represent the most serious and awful matters; the whole creation is serious in serving God, and us; all that are in heaven or hell are serious: how then can we be gay? To give these excellent words their full force, it should be known that they came not from the priesthood, but the court; and from a courtier as eminent as England ever boasted.

2. Important; weighty; not trifling.

I'll hence to London on a serious matter.

There's nothing serious in mortality;

All is but toys.

SERIOUSLY. adv. [from serious.] Gravely; solemnly; in earnest; without levity.

It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what horror and confusion must needs surprise that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another.

All laugh to find Unthinking plainness so o'erspread thy mind,
That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths, and to believe a God.
Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Arnobius, tell us, that this martyrdom first of all made them seriously inquisitive into that religion, which could endure the mind with so much strength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors.

SERIOUSNESS. n. s. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it.

The youth was received at the door by a servant, who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day.

SERMOCINATION. n. s. [sermocinatio, Latin.] The act or practice of making speeches.

SERMOCINATOR. n. s. [sermocinator, Lat.] A preacher; a speechmaker.

These obtrusive sermocinators make easy impression upon the minds of the vulgar.

SERMON. n. s. [sermon, Fr. sermo, Lat.]

A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.

As for our sermons, be they never so found and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguously termed his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed.

This our life, exempt from publick haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.

Sermons he heard, yet not so many
As left no time to practise any;

SER

He heard them reverently, and then
His practice preach'd them o'er again.

Many, while they have preached Christ in their sermons, have read a lecture of atheism in their practice.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;

A living sermon of the truths he taught.
TO SERMON. v. a. [sermoner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To discourse as in a sermon.

Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermoned at large, than thus cloudily inwrapped in allegorical devices.

2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.

Come, sermon me no farther:
No villanous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart.

SER MOUNTAIN, or Sefeli. n. s. [selex, Latin.] A plant.

SERO'SITY. n. s. [serosité, French.] Thin or watery part of the blood.

In these the salt and lixiviated serosity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds.

The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing and breathing, proceeds from a serosity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, œdematose, or schirrous, according to the viscosity of the humour.

SERROUS. adj. [seroux, Fr. serosus, Lat.]

1. Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the grumous or red part.

2. Adapted to the serum.

This disease is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a dropy by a dilation of the serous vessels, as that of the ovarium.

SERPENT. n. s. [serpens, Latin.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous. They are divided into two kinds: the viper, which brings young; and the snake, that lays eggs.

She was arrayed all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water fill'd up to the height;
In which a serpent did himself enfold,
That horror made to all that did behold.

She struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent like, upon the very heart.
They, or under ground, or circuit wide,
With serpent error wand'ring, found their way.

The chief I challeng'd; he, whose practis'd wit
Knew all the serpent mazes of deceit,
Eludes my search.

SERPENTINE. adv. [serpentinus, Latin; from serpent.]

1. Resembling a serpent.

I craved him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from so serpentine a companion as I am.

This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine, may shew
Thy inward fraud.

The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have I know not what of life and seeming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and serpent.

2. Winding like a serpent; anfractuons.

Nor can the sun
Perfect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct; but where he rose to-day
He comes no more, but with a cozening line
Steals by that point, and so is serpentine.

His hand th' adorned firmament display'd,
Those serpentine yet constant motions made.

How many spacious countries does the Rhine,
In winding banks, and mazes serpentine,
Traverse, before he splits on Belgia's plain,
And, lost in sand, creeps to the German main?

SERPENTINE. n. s. [dracantium.] An herb.

SERPENTINE Stone. n. s.

There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. The one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black ophites; another, called the white ophites, was green also, but variegated with spots of white: the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected.

Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that shall be infused therein for four-and-twenty hours, the taste and operation of the spaw-water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen and gravel.

SERPENT'S Tongue. n. s. [ophioglosson.] An herb.

SERPET. n. s. A basket.

SERPIGINOUS. adj. [from serpigo, Latin.] Diseased with a serpigo.

The skin behind her ear downwards became serpiginous, and was covered with white scales.

SERPIGO. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of tetter.

For thy own bowels, which do call thee fire,
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner.

She had a node, with pains, on her right leg, and a serpigo on her right hand.

TO SERR. v. a. [serrer, French.] To drive hard together; to crowd into a little space. Not received into use, nor deserving reception.

The frowning and knitting of the brows is a gathering or serring of the spirits, to resist in some measure; and also this knitting will follow upon earnest studying, though it be without dislike.

Heat attenuates and sends forth the spirit of a body, and upon that the more gross parts contract and serr themselves together.

SERRATE. } adj. [serratus, Lat.] Formed SERRATED. } with jags or indentures like the edge of a saw.

All that have serrate teeth are carnivorous. The common heron hath long legs for wading, a long neck answerable thereto to reach prey, a wide throat to pouch it, and long toes, with strong hooked talons, one of which is remarkably serrate on the edge.

This stick is usually knotted, and always armed: one of them with a curious shark's tooth near an inch long, and indented or serrated on both edges; a scurvy weapon.

SERRATION. n. s. [from serra, Latin.] Formation in the shape of a saw.

SERRATURE. n. s. [from serra, Latin.] Indenture like teeth of saws.

These are serrated on the edges; but the serratures are deeper and grosser than in any of the rest.

TO SERRY. v. a. [serrer, French; serrato, Italian.] To press close; to drive hard together. For serry, Bacon uses serr; but neither serr nor serry are received.

With them rose
A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appear'd, and serr'd shields in thick array,
Of death immeasurable.

Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout;
Nor serv'd it to relax their serr'd files.

SERVANT. n. s. [servant, Fr. servus, Lat.]

1. One who attends another, and acts at his command: the correlative of master.
Used of man or woman.

We are one in fortune; both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most.
Shakspeare.

I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition. Shakspeare.
He disdain'd not

Thenceforth the form of servant to assume. Milton.
For master or for servant here to call
Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden.

2. One in a state of subjection. Unusual.

Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the servant to defect,
Which else should free have wrong'd. Shakspeare.

3. A word of civility used to superiours or equals.

This subjection, due from all men to all men, is something more than the compliment of course, when our betters tell us they are our humble servants,
but understand us to be their slaves. Swift.

- To SERVANT. v. a. [from the noun.]

To subject. Not in use.

My affairs
Are servanted to others: though I owe
My revenge properly, remission lies In Volscean breasts. Shakspeare.

And given me by the king, when time should serve,
To be perus'd by you. Dryden.

8. To conduce; to be of use.

Churches, as every thing else, receive their chief perfection from the end whereunto they serve. Hooker.

Our speech to worldly superiours we frame in such sort as serveth best to inform and persuade the minds of them, who otherwise neither could nor would greatly regard our necessities. Hooker.

Who lessens thee, against his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might. Milton.

First investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs which serve for articulation, and the variety of matter to which those articulations are severally applied. Holder.

Fashion is, for the most part, nothing but the ostentation of riches; and therefore the high price of what serves to that, rather increases than lessens its vent. Locke.

Our victory only served to lead us on to further visionary prospects. Swift.

9. To officiate or minister: as, he served at Regions of sorrow, doleful shades.

Then to the desert takes his flight;
Where still from shade to shade the Son of God,
After forty days fasting, had remain'd.

The pious prince then seeks the shade
Which hides from sight his venerable maid.

5. Screen causing an exclusion of light or heat; umbrage.

Let the arched knife,
Well sharpen'd, now assail the spreading shades
Of vegetables, and their thirsty limbs dis sever.

In Brazilare trees, which kill those who sit under their shade in a few hours.

6. Protection; shelter.

7. The parts of a picture not brightly coloured.

'Tis ev'ry painter's art to hide from sight,
And cast in shades, what seen would not delight.

8. A colour; gradation of light.
White, red, yellow, blue, with their several degrees or shades and mixtures, as green, come only in by the eyes.

9. The figure formed upon any surface corresponding to the body by which the light is intercepted; the shadow.

Envy will merit, as its shade, pursue.

10. The soul separated from the body; so called, as supposed by the ancients to be perceptible to the sight, not to the touch.
A spirit; a ghost; manes.

To Trachin, swift as thought, the flitting shade
Thro' air his momentary journey made.

Ne'er to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation came a nobler guest;
Nor e'er was to the bow'rs of bliss convey'd
A fairer spirit or more welcome shade.

To SHADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To overspread with opacity.

Thou shad'st
The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud
Thy skirts appear.

2. To cover from the light or heat; to overspread.
A seraph fix wings wore to shade
His lineaments divine.

And, after these, came arm'd with spear and shield
An host so great as cover'd all the field;
And all their foreheads, like the knights before,
With laurels ever green was shaded o'er.

I went to crop the sylvan scenes,
And shade our altars with their leafy greens.

Sing, while beside the shaded tomb I mourn,
And with fresh bays her rural shrine adorn.

3. To shelter; to hide.
Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
The good patricians must be visited.

4. To protect; to cover; to screen.
Leave not the faithful side
That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects.

5. To mark with different gradations of colours.
The portal shone, inimitable on earth
By model, or by shading pencil drawn.

6. To paint in obscure colours.
SHA'DINESS. n. s. [from shady.] The state of being shady; umbrageousness.

SHA'DOW. n. s. [rcabu, Saxon; schaduw,
Dutch.]

1. The representation of a body by which the light is intercepted.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor.

Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more.

Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon.

The body, though it moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, the thing seems to stand still, as in the hands of clocks, and shadows of sun-dials.

2. Opacity; darkness; shade.
By the revolution of the skies
Night's sable shadows from the ocean rise.

His countrymen probably lived within the shade of the earthquake, and shadow of the eclipse.

3. Shelter made by any thing that intercepts the light, heat, or influence of the air.

In secret shadow from the sunny ray,
On a sweet bed of lilies softly laid.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree,
For your good host.

4. Obscure place.
To the secret shadows I retire,
To pay my penance till my years expire.

5. Dark part of a picture.
A shadow is the diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightened body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light, spreading itself into the air, or medium, proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold: the first is a single shadow, and the least of all; and is proper to the plain surface where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forsake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkeneth by a third part. It is used for the inmost shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulfs, wells, and caves.

After great lights there must be great shadows.

6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight;
a ghost; a spirit; a spirit, or shade.

Hence, horrible shadow!
Unreal mock'ry hence!

7. An imperfect and faint representation:
opposed to substance.

If substance might be call'd that shadow seem'd.
In the glorious lights of heaven we perceive a shadow of his divine countenance.

Without the least impulse or shadow of fate.
Amongst the creatures are particular excellencies scattered, which are some shadows of the divine perfections.

8. Inseparable companion.
Sin, and her shadow, death.

Thou my shadow
Inseparable must with me along.

9. Type; mystical representation.
Types and shadows of that destin'd seed.

10. Protection; shelter; favour.
Keep me under the shadow of thy wings.

To SHA'DOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cover with opacity.

The warlike elf much wonder'd at this tree,
So fair and great, that shadow'd all the ground.

The Assyrian was a cedar with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud.

2. To cloud; to darken.
Mistake me not for my complexion;
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour.

3. To make cool, or gently gloomy, by interception of the light or heat.

A gentle south-west wind comes creeping over flowery fields and shadowed waters in the extreme heat of summer.

4. To conceal under cover; to hide; to screen.

Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear 't before him; thereby shall we shadow
The number of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us.

5. To protect; to screen from danger; to shroud.

God shall forgive you Cœur de Lion's death,
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war.

6. To mark with various gradations of colour, or light.

Turnsoll is made of old linen rags dried, and laid in a saucer of vinegar, and set over a chafing-dish of coals till it boil; then wring it into a shell, and put it into a little gum arabick: it is good to shadow carnations, and all yellows.

From a round globe of any uniform colour, the idea imprinted on our minds is of a flat circle, variously shadowed with different degrees of light coming to our eyes.

More broken scene, made up of an infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings, that naturally arise from an agreeable mixture of hills, groves, and vallies.

7. To paint in obscure colours.
If the parts be too much distant, so that there be void spaces which are deeply shadowed, then place in those voids some fold, to make a joining of the parts.

8. To represent imperfectly.

Whereat I wak'd, and found
Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
Had lively shadow'd.
Augustus is shadowed in the person of Æneas.
Milton.
Dryden.

I have shadowed some part of your virtues under another name.
Dryden.

9. To represent typically.

Many times there are three things said to make up the substance of a sacrament; namely, the grace which is thereby offered, the element which shadow-eth or signifieth grace, and the word which expresseth what is done by the element.
Hooker.

The shield being to defend the body from weapons, aptly shadows out to us the continence of the emperor, which made him proof to all the attacks of pleasure.
Addison.

SHA'DOWGRASS. n. f. [from shadow and grass; gramen sylvestricum, Lat.] A kind of grass.

SHA'DOWY. adj. [from shadow.]

1. Full of shade; gloomy.

This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns.
Shakspeare.

With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,
A sudden youth the groves enjoy.
Fenton.

2. Not brightly luminous.

More pleasant light
Shadowy sets off the face of things.
Milton.

3. Faintly representative; typical.

When they see Law can discover sin, but not remove Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude
Some blood more precious must be paid for man.
Milton.

4. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death; by which he hath interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory.
Addison.

5. Dark; opaque.

By command, ere yet dim night
Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste Homeward.
Milton.

SHA'DY. adj. [from shade.]

1. Full of shade; mildly gloomy.

The wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and in shadowy covert hid Tunes her nocturnal note.
Milton.
Stretch'd at ease you sing your happy loves,
And Amaryllis fills the shady groves.
Dryden.

2. Secure from the glare of light, or fultriness of heat.

Cast it also that you may have rooms shady for summer, and warm for winter.
Bacon.

SHAFT. n. f. [sceapt, Sax.]

1. An arrow; a missile weapon.

To pierce pursuing shield,
By parents train'd, the Tartars wild are taught,
With shafts shot out from their back-turned bow.
Sidney.

Who, in the spring, from the new sun
Already has a fever got,
Too late begins those shafts to shun
Which Phœbus thro' his veins has shot.
Waller.
They are both the archer and shaft taking aim afar off, and then shooting themselves directly upon the desired mark.
More.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow
With vigour drawn must send the shaft below.
Dryden.

2. [shaft, Dutch.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.

They sink a shaft or pit of six foot in length.
Carew.

The fulminating damp, upon its accension, gives a crack like the report of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and force bodies of great weight from the bottom of the pit up through the shaft.
Woodward.

Suppose a tube, or, as the miners call it, a shaft, were sunk from the surface of the earth to the center.
Arbutnot.

3. Any thing straight; the spire of a church.

Practise to draw small and easy things, as a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple.
Peacham.

SHAG. n. f. [sceaga, Sax.]

1. Rough woolly hair.

Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kern,
Hath he conversed with the enemy;
And given me notice of their villanies.
Shakspeare.
Where is your husband?

He's a traitor.

—Thou lyest, thou shag-ear'd villain! Shakspeare.
From the shag of his body, the shape of his legs,
his having little or no tail, the slowness of his gait, and his climbing up of trees, he seems to come near the bear kind.
Grew.

True Witney broad cloth, with its shag unshorn,
Be this the horseman's fence.
Gay.

2. A kind of cloth.

SHAG. n. f. [phalacrocorax, Lat.] A sea bird.

Among the first sort we reckon shags, duck, and mallard.
Carew.

SHA'GGED. } adj. [from shag.]

SHA'GGY. }

1. Rugged; rough; hairy.

They change their hue, with haggard eyes they stare,
Lean are their looks, and shagged is their hair.
Dryden.

A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin.
Dryden.
From the frosty north

The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings,
In battailous array, while Volga's stream
Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,
Her borderers, on mutual slaughter bent.
Phillips.

2. Rough; rugged.

They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,
Rocks, waters, woods; and by the shaggy tops
Uplifting, bore them in their hands.
Milton.

There, where very desolation dwells,
By grotts and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,
She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
Be it not done in pride.
Milton.

Through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill
Pass'd underneath ingulph'd.
Milton.

How would the old king smile
To see you weigh the paws when tipt with gold,
And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders.
Addison.

Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn;
Ye grotts and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn!
Pope.

SHA'GREEN. n. f. [chagrin, Fr.] The skin of a kind of fish, or skin made rough in imitation of it.

To SHA'GREEN. v. a. [chagriner, Fr.] To irritate; to provoke. Both should be written chagrin.

To SHAIL. v. n. To walk sidewise. A low word.

Child, you must walk straight, without skewing and shailing to every step you set.
L'Estrange.

To SHAKE. v. a. preterit shook; part. pass.
shaken, or shook. [sceacan, Sax. shecken,
Dutch.]

1. To put into a vibrating motion; to move with quick returns backward and forward; to agitate.

Who honours not his father,
Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake, Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by.
Shakspeare.

I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants.
Zechariah.

I shook my lap, and said, so God shake out every man from his house; even thus be he shaken out and emptied.
Nehemiah.

The stars fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind.
Revelations.

He shook the sacred honours of his head:
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distil.
Dryden.

She first her husband on the poop espies,
Shaking his hand at distance on the main;
She took the sign, and shook her hand again.
Dryden.

2. To make to totter or tremble.

The rapid wheels shake heav'n's basis. Milton.
Let France acknowledge that her shaken throne
Was once supported, sir, by you alone. Roscommon.

3. To throw down by a violent motion.

Macbeth is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
Put on their instruments. Shakspeare.

The tyrannous breathing of the north Shakes all her buds from blowing. Shakspeare.

When ye depart, shake off the dust of your feet.
Matthew.

He looked at his book, and, holding out his right leg, put it into such a quivering motion, that I thought he would have shaken it off. Tatler.

4. To throw away; to drive off.

'Tis our first intent
To shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths, whilst we Unburthen'd crawl towards death. Shakspeare.

5. To weaken; to put in danger.

When his doctrines grew too strong to be shook by his enemies, they persecuted his reputation.
Atterbury.

6. To drive from resolution; to depress;
to make afraid.

A fly and constant knave, not to be shook'd.
Shakspeare.

This respite shook
The bosom of my conscience. Shakspeare.
Be not soon shaken in mind, or troubled, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 2 Thessalonians.

Not my firm faith
Can by his fraud be shaken or seduc'd. Milton.

7. To SHAKE hands. This phrase, from the action used among friends at meeting and parting, sometimes signifies to join with, but commonly to take leave of.

With the slave
He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to th' chops.
Shakspeare.

Nor can it be safe to a king to tarry among them who are shaking hands with their allegiance, under pretence of laying faster hold of their religion.
King Charles.

8. To SHAKE off. To rid himself; to free from; to divest of.

Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me:

Antonio never yet was thief or pirate. Shakspeare.
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs,
I'd with thee every foot. Shakspeare.

Say, sacred bard! what could bestow
Courage on thee, to soar so high?
Tell me, brave friend! what help'd thee so
To shake off all mortality? Waller.

Him I reserved to be answered by himself, after I had shaken off the lesser and more barking creature.
Stillington.

Can I want courage for so brave a deed?

I've shook it off: my soul is free from fear. Dryden.
Here we are free from the formalities of custom and respect: we may shake off the haughty impertinent. Collier.

How does thy beauty smooth
The face of war, and make even horror smile?
At sight of thee my heart shakes off its sorrows.
Addison.

To SHAKE. v. n.

1. To be agitated with a vibratory motion.

Darts are counted as stubble: he laugheth at the shaking of a spear. Job.

2. To totter.

Under his burning wheels
The steadfast empyrean shook throughout,
All but the throne itself of God. Milton.

3. To tremble; to be unable to keep the body still.

Thy fight, which should our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts, ains them weep, and shake with fear and
row.
at said the wench, when he rose up again?
bled and shook; for why, he stamp'd,
the vicar meant to cozen him.
Shakespeare.
Shaking through their limbs they find,
leaves saluted by the wind.
Waller.
to be in terroure; to be deprived of successors, and in deep despair,

He, short of dismal prospect of the war.
Dryden.
[from the verb.]
suffered.
fame with ev'ry toy be pos'd,
b, which poisonous fancies make;
oldier's honour was compos'd
If that thy friends; civility plays the rest,
But the great friends; civility plays the rest,
Of thicker friends; civility plays the rest,
Wisdom picks a cleanly, passeth with thee best.
Herbert.
A toy, thunn

2. Impulse; The freehol is the substant
more than blo
shake of wind.
3. Vibratory
Several of his countrymen probably lived within the earthquake, and the shadow of the eclipse, which are recorded by this author.
Addison.
4. Motion given and received.
Our saluta consisting of many kind shakes of the hand.
Addison.

SHA'KER. n. s. [from shake.] The person or thing that shakes.
Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise,
He said; the shaker of the earth replies.
Pope.

SHALE. n. s. [corrupted, I think, for shell.]
A husk; the case of seeds in siliquous plants.
Behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
Shakespeare.

SHALL. v. defective. [reel, Sax. is originally I owe, or I ought. In Chaucer, the faith I shall to God, means the faith I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devoir, dois, doit, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification; and the Swedes have skall, and the Islanders skal, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.

The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will:
but I shall endeavour, crassa Minerva, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense.]

1. I SHALL love. It will so be that I must love; I am resolved to love.
2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love?
Will it be that I must love?
3. Thou SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love; [in poetry or solemn diction] it will be that thou must love.
4. SHALT thou love? Will it be that thou must love? Will it be permitted to thee to love?
5. He SHALL love. It will be that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.

It is a mind, that shall remain.
—Shall remain!
Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you
His absolute shall?
Shakespeare.
See Romulus the great:
This prince a priestess of your blood shall bear;
And, like his fire, in arms he shall appear.
Dryden.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon all his despair is founded;
and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him.
Hammond.

6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? [in solemn language] Will it be that he must love?
7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singulars.

SHALLOO'N. n. s. A flight woollen stuff.
In blue shalloon shall Hannibal be clad,
And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid.
Swift.

SHA'LLOP. n. s. [chaloupe, Fr.] A small boat.

You were resolved, after your arrival into Oro-noque, to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desired to have Sir John Fearn's shallop: I do not allow of that course, because ye cannot land so secretly but that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat.
Raleigh.

Our hero set
In a small shallop, fortune in his debt.
Waller.

SHA'LLOW. adj. [This word is probably compounded of shoal and low.]

1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.
I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor.
Shakespeare.
That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drowned, perished for want of food.
Bacon.
The like opinion he held of Meotis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably shallower in his days,
and would in process of time become a firm land.
Brown.

I am made a shallow forded stream,
Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scorn'd,
And all my faults expos'd.
Dryden.
Shallow brooks, that flow'd so clear,
The bottom did the top appear.
Dryden.
In shallow furrows vines securely grow.
Dryden.

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound;
not very knowing or wise; empty;
trifling; futile; silly.

I'll shew my mind,
According to my shallow simple skill.
Shakespeare.
This is a very shallow monster;
Afraid of him? A very shallow monster,
The man i' th' moon! A most poor credulous monster.
Shakespeare.
The king was neither so shallow nor so ill advertised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the investing himself of Britaigne.
Bacon.

Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself.
Milton.

One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more conceited than the rest.
Addison.

3. Not deep of sound.
If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the sound perfecter, and not so shallow and jarring.
Bacon.

SHA'LLOW. n. s. [from the adjective.] A shelf; a sand; a flat; a shoal; a place where the water is not deep.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial.
Shakespeare.

A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel.
Bacon.

Having but newly left those grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported, to be tost with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controvery, they do grow into hatred of learning.
Milton.

You that so oft have founded And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps
And shallows of his heart, should need no instruments
To advance your ends.
Denham.

He sounds and fathoms him, to find
The shallows of his soul.
Dryden.

The wary Dutch
Behind their treach'rous shallows now withdraw,
And there lay snares to catch the British host.
Dry.
Three more fierce Eurys in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land.
Dryden.
In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows.
Burnet.

Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallows.
Ray.

With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct,
he may decline both rocks and shallows.
Norris.
The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation?
Bentley.

SHA'LLOWBRAINED. adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.

It cannot but be matter of just indignation to all good men, to see a company of lewd shallow-brained huffs making atheism, and contempt of religion, the sole badge of wit.
South.

SHA'LLOWLY. adv. [from shallow.]

1. With no great depth.
The load lieth open on the grass, or but shallowly covered.
Carew.
2. Simply; foolishly.
Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.
Shakespeare.

SHA'LLOWNESS. n. s. [from shallow.]

1. Want of depth.
2. Want of thought; want of understanding; futility; silliness; emptiness.

By it do all things live their measur'd hour;
We cannot ask the thing which is not there,
Blaming the shallowness of our request.
Herbert.
I cannot wonder enough at the shallowness and impertinent zeal of the vulgar sort in Druids, who were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his successes, when it little concerned their religion or security.
Howell.

SHALM. n. s. [German.] A kind of musical pipe.

Every captain was commanded to have his soldiers in readiness to set forward upon the sign given, which was by the sound of a shalm or hoboy.
Kneller.

SHALT. Second person of shall.
To SHAM. v. n. [shommi, Welsh, to cheat.]

1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences.
A low word.

Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by shame than by conscience, when they find themselves fooled and shammed into a conviction.
L'Estrange.

Then all your wits that fear and sham,
Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
From whom I jests and puns purloin,
And sily put them off for mine,
Fond to be thought a country wit. Prior.

2. To obtrude by fraud or folly.

We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, sham fallacies upon the world for current reason. L'Estrange.

SHAM. n. s. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.

No sham so gross but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatistical and inquisitive.

It goes a great way when natural curiosity and vulgar prejudice shall be assisted with the shams of astrological judgments. L'Estrange.

He that first brought the sham, wheedle, or banter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those ideas
he made it stand for. Locke.

That in the sacred temple needs would try
Without a fire, th' unheated gums to fry,
Believe who will the solemn sham, not I. Addison.

SHAM. adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious;
pretended.

Never join the fray,
Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way. Gay.

SHAMBLE. n. s. [of uncertain etymology; scannaglia, Italian.]

1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.

Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament-house.

I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.
—Oh, ay, as summer flies are in the shambles,
That quicken ev'n with blowing. Shakespeare.

He warned a flock of sheep, that were driving to the shambles, of their danger; and, upon uttering some sounds, they all fled. Arbutnot.

2. It is here improperly used.

When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his back the shambles of the executioner, there is no more conviction in the one than in the other.

SHAMBLING. adj. [See SCAMBLING.]
Moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.

By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona.

So when nurse Nokes to act young Ammon tries,
With shambling legs, long chin, and foolish eyes,
With dangling hands he strokes the imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.

SHAME. n. s. [Ocean, Sax. schæmte,
Dutch.]

1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.

Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lie,
And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.
—Urge neither charity nor shame to me:
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd;
My charity is outrage, life my shame;
And in my shame still lives my sorrow's rage.

Hide, for shame,
Romans, your grandfathers images,
That blush at their degenerate progeny. Dryden.

In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame, to deny the connection of ideas. Locke.

2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace; ignominy.

The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say, a thousand times,
His Julia gave it him at his departure. Shakespeare.

God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion. South.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times tried, has never fail'd of taking:
For 'twere a shame a poet should be kill'd,
Under the shelter of so broad a shield. Dryden.

O shame to manhood! shall one daring boy
The scheme of all our happiness destroy? Pope.

3. Reproach; infliction of shame.

A foul shame is upon the thief. Ecclesiasticus.

Turn'd to exploding his, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milton.

To SHAME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make ashamed; to fill with shame.

To tell thee of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless. Shakespeare.

If thou hast power to raise him, bring him hither,
And I've power to shame him hence:
Oh, while you live, tell truth and shame the devil.

Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleaveland.

Despoil'd
Of all our good, sham'd, naked, miserable. Milton.

What hurt can there be in all the slanders and disgraces of this world, if they are but the arts and methods of providence, to shame us into the glories of the next? South.

Were there but one righteous man in the world, he would hold up his head with confidence and honour; he would shame the world, and not the world him. South.

He, in a loathsome dungeon doom'd to lie,
In bonds retain'd his birthright liberty,
And sham'd oppression, till it set him free. Dryden.

The coward bore the man immortal spite,
Who sham'd him out of madness into flight. Dryden.

Who shames a scribbler, breaks a cobweb through;
He spins the slight self-pleasing thread anew. Pope.

2. To disgrace.

Certes, sir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead,
And with foul cowardice his carcass shame. Fairy Queen.

To SHAME. v. n. To be ashamed.

Great shame it is, thing so divine in view,
Made for to be the world's most ornament,
To make the bait her gazers to embrew;
Good shames to be to ill an instrument. Spenser.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art ex-traught,
To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart? Shakespeare.

To the trunk of it authors give such a magnitude, as I shame to repeat. Raleigh.

Cruel Auster thither hied him;
And, with the rush of one rude blast,
Sham'd not spitefully to waste
All his leaves, so fresh, so sweet,
And lay them trembling at his feet. Crashaw.

SHAMEFACED. adj. [shame and face.]
Modest; bashful; easily put out of countenance.

Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasing, and pleasure shame- faced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney.

Conscience is a blushing shamefac'd spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom: it hills one full of obstacles. Shakespeare.

A man may be shamefaced, and a woman modest,
to the degree of scandalous. L'Estrange.

Your shamefac'd virtue shunn'd the people's praise,
And senate's honours. Dryden.

From this time we may date that remarkable turn in the behaviour of our fashionable Englishmen, that makes them shamefaced in the exercise of those duties which they were sent into the world to perform. Addison.

SHAMEFACEDLY. adv. [from shame- faced.] Modestly; bashfully.

SHAMEFACEDNESS. n. s. [from shame- faced.] Modesty; bashfulness; timidity.

Dorus, having had all the while a free beholding of the fair Pamela, could well have defended the assault he gave unto her face with bringing a fair stain of shamefacedness into it. Sidney.

She is the fountain of your modesty;
You shamefac'd are, but shamefac'dness itself is she. Fairy Queen.

None but fools, out of shamefacedness, hide their ulcers, which, if shown, might be healed. Dryden.

SHAMEFUL. adj. [shame and full.]

1. Disgraceful; ignominious; infamous; reproachful.

This all through that great prince's pride did fall,
And came to shameful end. Fairy Queen.

For this he shall live hated, be blasphem'd,
Seiz'd on my force, judg'd, and to death condemn'd,
A shameful and accurst! Milton.

His naval preparations were not more surprising than his quick and shameful retreat; for he returned to Carthage with only one ship, having fled without striking one stroke. Arbutnot.

The knave of diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins, O shameful chance! the queen of hearts. Pope.

2. Full of indignity or indecency; raising shame in another.

Phœbus flying so most shameful fight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies,
And hides for shame. Fairy Queen.

SHAMEFULLY. adv. [from shameful.]

1. Disgracefully; ignominiously; infamously; reproachfully.

But I his holy secret
Presumptuously have publish'd, impiously,
Weakly at least, and shamefully. Milton.

Would she shamefully fail in the last act in this contrivance of the nature of man? More.

Those who are ready enough to confess him, both in judgment and profession, are, for the most part, very prone to deny him shamefully in their doings. South.

2. With indignity; with indecency; so as ought to cause shame.

None but that saw, quoth he, would ween for truth,
How shamefully that maid he did torment. Fairy Queen.

SHAMELESS. adj. [from shame.] Wanting shame; wanting modesty; impudent;
frontless; immodest; audacious.

To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless. Shakespeare.

Beyond imagination is the wrong
That she this day hath shameless thrown on me. Shakespeare.

The shameless denial hereof by some of their friends, and the more shameless justification by some of their flatterers, makes it needful to exemplify, which I had rather forbear. Raleigh.

God deliver the world from such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion, and the shameless subverters of morality. South.

Such shameless bards we have; and yet 'tis true,
There are as mad, abandon'd criticks too. Pope.

SHAMELESSLY. adv. [from shameless.] Impudently; audaciously; without shame.

The king, to-day, as one of the vain fellows, shamelessly uncovereth himself. 2 Samuel.

He must needs be shamelessly wicked that abhors not this licentiousness. Hale.

SHAMELESSNESS. n. s. [from shameless.]
Impudence; want of shame; immodesty.

Being most impudent in her heart, she could,
when she would, teach her cheeks blushing, and make shamefacedness the cloak of shamelessness. Sidney.

He that blushes not at his crime, but adds shame to his shame, hath nothing left to restore him to virtue. Taylor.

SHA'MMER. n. s. [from sham.] A cheat; an impostor. A low word.

SHA'MOIS. n. s. [chamois, Fr.] See CHAMOIS. A kind of wild goat.

I'll bring thee
To clust'ring fivers, and sometimes I'll get thee
Young shamois from the rocks. Shakspeare.

SHA'MROCK. n. s. The Irish name for three leaved grass.

If they found a plot of watercresses, or shamrocks, there they flocked as to a feast for the time. Spenser.

SHANK. n. s. [reanca, Sax. schenckel, Dutch.]

1. The middle joint of the leg; that part which reaches from the ankle to the knee.

Eftsoons her white straight legs were altered
To crooked crawling shanks, of marrow emptied;
And her fair face to foul and loathsome hue,
And her fine corps to a bag of venom grew. Spenser.

The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shanks. Shakspeare.

A stag says, if these pitiful shanks of mine were but answerable to this branching head, I can't but think how I should defy all my enemies. L'Estrange.

2. The bone of the leg.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
O'er cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks, and yellow chaplets skulls. Shakspeare.

3. The long part of any instrument.

The shank of a key, or some such long hole, the punch cannot strike, because the shank is not forged with substance sufficient. Mason.

4. [bryonia, Lat.] An herb.

SHA'NKED. adj. [from shank.] Having a shank.

SHA'NKER. n. s. [chancre, Fr.] A venereal excrescence.

To SHAPE. v. a. pret. shaped; part. pass. shaped and shapen. [rycypa, Sax. schep-pen, Dutch.]

1. To form; to mould with respect to external dimensions.

I, that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shakspeare.

Those nature hath shaped with a great head, narrow breast, and shoulders sticking out, seem much inclined to a consumption. Harvey.

Mature the virgin was, of Egypt's race;
Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her face. Prior.

2. To mould; to cast; to regulate; to adjust.

Drag the villain hither by the hair,
Nor age nor honour shall shape privilege. Shakspeare.

Mr. Candish, when without hope, and ready to shape his course by the east homewards, met a ship which came from the Philippines. Raleigh.

To the stream, when neither friends, nor force,
Nor speed, nor art avail, he shapes his course. Denham.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.

3. To image; to conceive.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakspeare.

It is my nature's plague
To spy into abuse, and oft my jealousy Shapes faults that are not. Shakspeare.

When fancy hath formed and shaped the perfectest ideas of blessedness, our own more happy experiences of greater must disabuse us. Boyle.

4. To make; to create. Obsolete.

I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. Psalms.

SHAPE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Form; external appearance.

He beat me grievously in the shape of a woman;
for in the shape of a man, master Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam. Shakspeare.

The shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared for battle. Revelations.

The other shape,
If shape it may be call'd that shape had none
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton.

In vegetables and animals the shape we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. Make of the trunk of the body.

First a charming shape enslav'd me,
An eye then gave the fatal stroke;
Till by her wit Corinna sav'd me,
And all my former fetters broke. Addison.

Fathers and mothers, friends and relations, seem to have no other wish towards the little girl, but that she may have a fair skin, a fine shape, dress well, and dance to admiration. Law.

3. Being, as moulded into form.

Before the gates there sat
On either side a formidable shape. Milton.

4. Idea; pattern.

Thy heart
Contains of good, wise, just, the perfect shape. Milton.

5. It is now used in low conversation for manner.

SHA'PELESS. adj. [from shape.] Wanting regularity of form; wanting symmetry of dimensions.

You are born
To set a form upon that indigest,
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude. Shakspeare.

He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere;
Ill fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where. Shakspeare.

Thrice had I lov'd thee,
Before I knew thy face or name;
So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame,
Angels affect us oft, and worshipp'd be. Donne.

Now the victor stretch'd his eager hand,
Where the tall nothing stood, or seem'd to stand;
A shapeless shade, it melted from his sight,
Like forms in clouds, or visions of the night! Pope.

Some objects please our eyes,
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice. Pope.

SHA'PELINESS. n. s. [from shapely.] Beauty or proportion of form.

SHA'PELY. adv. [from shape.] Symmetrical; well formed.

SHA'PESMITH. n. s. [shape and smith.] One who undertakes to improve the form of the body. A burlesque word.

No shapsmith yet set up and drove a trade,
To mend the work that providence had made. Garth.

SHARD. n. s. [schaerde, Frisick.]

1. A fragment of an earthen vessel.

For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chants,
Her maiden strewments. Shakspeare.

2. [chard.] A plant.

Shards or mallows for the pot
Keep the loosen'd body sound. Dryden.

3. It seems in Spenser to signify a frith or strait. It is used, says Upton, in the west, for a gap.

Upon that shore he spied Atin stand,
There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phedria's fleet bark, over that per'ous shard. Fairy Queen.

4. A sort of fish.

SHA'RDBORN. adj. [shard and born.] Born or produced among broken stones or pots. Perhaps shard, in Shakspeare, may signify the sheaths of the wings of insects.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shardborn beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakspeare.

SHA'RDED. adj. [from shard.] Inhabiting shards.

Often shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold,
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. Shakspeare.

To SHARE. v. n. [reapan, reynan, Saxon.]

1. To divide; to part among many.

Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you. Shakspeare.

Any man may take trial of his fortune, provided he acknowledge the lord's right, by sharing out unto him a toll. Carew.

Well may he then to you his cares impart,
And share his burden where he shares his heart. Dryden.

In the primitive times the advantage of priesthood was equally shared among all the order, and none of that character had any superiority. Collier.

Though the weight of a falsehood would be too heavy for one to bear, it grows light in their imaginations when it is shared among many. Addison.

Suppose I share my fortune equally between my children and a stranger, will that unite them? Swift.

2. To partake with others; to seize or possess jointly with another.

The captain, half of whose soldiers are dead, and the other quarter never mustered or seen, comes shortly to demand payment of his whole account;
where, by good means of some great ones, and privy sharings with the officers of other some, he received his debt. Spenser.

In vain does valour bleed,
While avarice and rapine share the land. Milton.

Go, silently enjoy your part of grief,
And share the sad inheritance with me. Dryden.

Wav'd by the wanton winds his banner flies,
All maiden white, and shares the people's eyes. Dryden.

This was the prince decreed,
To share his sceptre. Dryden.

Not love of liberty nor thirst of honour,
Drew you thus far; but hopes to share the spoil
Of conquer'd towns and plunder'd provinces. Addison.

All night it rains, the shews return with day;
Great Jove with Cæsar shares his sov'reign sway. Legie.

3. To cut; to separate; to sheer. [from reap, Sax.]

With swift wheel reverse deep ent'ring shar'd
All his right side. Milton.

Scalp, face, and shoulders the keen steel divides,
And the shar'd visage hangs on equal sides. Dryden.

To SHARE. v. n. To have part; to have a dividend.

I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more. Shakspeare.

Had greater haste these sacred rites prepar'd,
Some guilty months had in your triumphs shar'd;
But this untainted year is all your own. Dryden.

A right of inheritance gave every one a title to share in the goods of his father. Locke.

This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs. Swift.

SHARE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Part; allotment; dividend obtained.

If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and befitting share
Of that which lewdly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some with vast excess. Milton.

The subdued territory was divided into greater and smaller shares, besides that reserved to the prince.

I'll give you arms; burn, ravish, and destroy;
For my own share one beauty I design;
Engage your honours that she shall be mine.

Dryden.

While fortune favour'd,
I made some figure; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame.

Dryden.

The youths have equal share
In Marcia's wishes, and divide their sister.

Addison.

In poets as true genius is but rare,
True taste as seldom is the critic's share.

Pope.

He who doth not perform that part assigned him, is a very mischievous member of the publick; because he takes his share of the profit, and yet leaves his share of the burden to be born by others.

Swift.

2. To go shares; to partake.

They went a hunting, and every one to go share and share alike in what they took.

L'Estrange.

By being desirous that every one should have their full share of the favours of God, they would not only be content, but glad, to see one another happy in the little enjoyments of this transitory life.

Law.

3. A part contributed.

These, although they bear a share in the discharge, yet have different offices in the composition.

Brown.

4. [reap, Saxon.] The blade of the plough that cuts the ground.

Nor laws they knew, nor manners, nor the care
Of lab'ring oxen, nor the shining share.

Dryden.

Great cities shall with walls be compass'd round,
And sharpen'd shares shall vex the fruitful ground.

Dryden.

Incumbent o'er the shining share
The master leans, removes th' obstructive clay.

Thomson.

For clay the coulter is long and bending, and the share narrow.

Mortimer.

SHA'REBONE. n. s. [share and bone.] The os pubis; the bone that divides the trunk from the limbs.

The cartilage bracing together the two ossa pubis, or sharebones, Bartholine faith, is twice thicker and laxer in women than men.

Derham.

SHARER. n. s. [from share.]

1. One who divides or apportions to others; a divider.

2. A partaker; one who participates any thing with others.

Most it seem'd the French king to import,
As sharer in his daughter's injury.

Daniel.

People not allowed to be sharers with their companions in good fortune, will hardly agree to be sharers in bad.

L'Estrange.

An overgrown estate falling into the hands of one that has many children, it is broken into so many portions as render the sharers rich enough.

Addison.

You must have known it.
—Indeed I did, then favour'd by the king,
And by that means a sharer in the secret.

Rowe.

It, by taking on himself human nature at large, he hath a compassionate and tender sense of the infirmities of mankind in general, he must needs, in a peculiar manner, feel and commiserate the infirmities of the poor, in which he himself was so eminent a sharer.

Atterbury.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof in your days of probation you have been a sharer.

Pope to Swift.

SHARK. n. s. [canis charcharius, Latin.]

1. A voracious sea fish.

His jaws horrid arm'd with threefold fate,
The direful shark.

Thomson.

2. A greedy artful fellow; one who fills his pockets by fly tricks. A low word.

David's messengers are sent back to him, like so many sharks and runnagates, only for endeavouring to compliment an ill nature out of itself, and seeking that by petition which they might have commanded by their sword.

South.

3. Trick; fraud; petty rapine. A low word.

Wretches who live upon the shark, and other men's sins, the common poisoners of youth, equally desperate in their fortunes and their manners, and getting their very bread by the damnation of souls.

South.

To SHARK. v. a. To pick up hastily or sily.

Young Fontinbras,
Of unimproved mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd up a list of landless resolute.

Shakspeare.

To SHARK. v. n.

1. To play the petty thief. A low word.
The fly leads a lazy, voluptuous, scandalous, sharking life, hateful wherever she comes.

L'Estrange.

2. To cheat; to trick. A low word.

Ainsworth.

There are cheats by natural inclination as well as by corruption: nature taught this boy to shark, not discipline.

L'Estrange.

The old generous English spirit, which heretofore made this nation so great in the eyes of all the world, seems utterly extinct; and we are degenerated into a mean, sharking, fallacious, undermining converse; there being a share and a trapan almost in every word we hear, and every action we see.

South.

3. To SHARK. To fawn upon for a dinner.

SHARP. adj. [reap, Sax. scherpe, Dut.]
1. Keen; piercing; having a keen edge; having an acute point; not blunt.

She hath tied

Sharp tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here.

Shakspeare.

In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns;
And fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp quill'd porcupine.

Shakspeare.

Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs, like a sharp razor, working deceitfully.

Psalms.

With edged grooving tools they cut down and smoothen away the extuberances left by the sharp pointed grooving tools, and bring the work into a perfect shape.

Moxon.

2. Terminating in a point or edge; not obtuse.

The form of their heads is narrow and sharp, that they may the better cut the air in their swift flight.

More.

There was seen some miles in the sea a great pillar of light, not sharp, but in form of a column or cylinder, rising a great way up towards heaven.

Bacon.

To come near the point, and draw unto a sharper angle, they do not only speak and practise truth, but really desire its enlargement.

Brown.

Their embryo atoms
Light arm'd or heavy, sharp, smooth, light, or slow.

Milton.

It is so much the firmer, by how much broader the bottom, and sharper the top.

Temple.

In shipping such as this the Irish kern,
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
Ere sharp keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side.

Dryden.

3. Acute of mind; witty; ingenious; inventive.

Now as fine in his apparel as if he would make me in love with a cloak, and verse for verse with the sharpest witted lover in Arcadia.

Sidney.

If we had nought but sense, each living wight,
Which we call brute, would be more sharp than we.

Davies.

Sharp to the world, but thoughtless of renown,
They plot not on the stage, but on the town.

Dryden.

There is nothing makes men sharper, and sets their hands and wits more at work, than want.

Addison.

Many other things belong to the material world, wherein the sharpest philosophers have never yet arrived at clear and distinct ideas.

Watts.

4. Quick, as of sight or hearing.

As the sharpest eye discerneth nought,
Except the sun-beams in the air do shine;
So the best soul, with her reflecting thought,
Sees not herself without some light divine.

Davies.

To sharp eyed reason this would seem untrue;
But reason I through love's false optics view.

Dryden.

5. Sour without astringency; four, but not austere; acid.

So we, if children young diseases'd we find,
Anoint with sweets the vessel's foremost parts,
To make them taste the potions sharp we give;
They drink deceiv'd, and so deceiv'd they live.

Spenser.

Sharp tasted citrous Median elixirs produce;
Bitter the rind, but generous is the juice.

Dryden.

Different simple ideas are sometimes expressed by the same word, as sweet and sharp are applied to the objects of hearing and tasting.

Watts.

6. Shrill; piercing the ear with a quick noise; not flat.

In whistling you contract the mouth, and, to make it more sharp, men use their finger.

Bacon.

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound strikes so sharp, as you can scarce endure it.

Bacon.

For the various modulation of the voice, the upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp.

Ray.

7. Severe; harsh; biting; farcassick.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife,
I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Shakspeare.

How often may we meet with those who are one while courteous, but within a small time after are so supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptionous, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very foresh and burdens of society!

South.

Cease contention: be thy words severe,
Sharp as he merits; but the sword forbear.

Dryden.

8. Severe; quick to punish; cruel; severely rigid.

There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue us.

Shakspeare.

9. Eager; hungry; keen upon a quest.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,

Gothick; reo, Saxon; she, old English.]

1. The female pronoun demonstrative; the woman; the woman before mentioned.

She, of whom the ancients seem'd to prophesy,
When they call'd virtues by the name of she;

She, in whom virtue was so much refin'd,

That for allay unto so pure a mind

She took the weaker sex. Donne.

This once disclos'd,

The ladies did change favours, and then we Following the signs, woo'd but the sign of she.

Shakspeare.

What, at any time, have you heard her say?

Shakspeare.

The most upright of mortal men was he;

The most sincere and holy woman she. Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used for a woman absolutely, with some degree of contempt.

The shes of Italy shall not betray

Mine interest, and his honour. Shakspeare.

Lady, you are the cruell'st she alive,

If you will lead these graces to the grave,

And leave the world no copy. Shakspeare.

I was wont

To load my she with knacks; I would have ranfack'd

The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it

To her acceptance. Shakspeare.

3. The female; not the male.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look,

Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear,

To win thee, lady. Shakspeare.

The nightingale, if she would sing by day,

When ev'ry goose is cackling, would be thought

No better a musician than the wren. Shakspeare.

He lions are hirsute, and have great manes; the shes are smooth, like cats. Bacon.

Stand it in Judah's chronicles confest,

That David's son, by impious passion mov'd,

Smote a she slave, and murder'd what he lov'd. Prior.

SHEAF. n. f. sheaves, plural. [reap,
Saxon; schoof, Dutch.]

1. A bundle of stalks of corn bound together, that the ears may be dry.

These be the sheaves that honour's harvest bears;
The seed, thy valiant acts; the world the field.

Fairfax.

He beheld a field,

Part arable and tilth; whereon were sheaves

New reap'd: the other part sheep-walks and folds. Milton.

The reaper fills his greedy hands,

And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands. Dryden.

2. Any bundle or collection held together.

She vanish'd;

The sheaf of arrows shook and rattled in the case. Dryden.

In the knowledge of bodies, we must glean what we can; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature of whole species. Locke.

To SHEAL. v. a. To shell. See SHALE.

Thou art a shealed peasecod. Shakspeare.

To SHEAR. preterit shore or sheared; part.
pass. shorn. [reapan, reynen, Saxon.]

This word is more frequently written sheer, but sheer cannot analogically form shore or shorn: shear, shore, shorn, as tear, tore, torn.]

1. To clip or cut by interception between two blades moving on a river.

So many days, my ewes have been with young;

So many weeks, ere the poor fools will yean;

So many months, ere I shall shear the fleece. Shakspeare.

Laban went to shear his sheep. Genesis.

When wool is new shorn, they set pails of water

by in the same room to increase its weight. Bacon.

To lay my head, and hollow pledge

Of all my strength, in the lascivious lap

Of a deceitful concubine, who shore me,

Like a tame wether, all my precious fleece. Milton.

The same ill taste of sense would serve to join Dog foxes in the yoke, and sheer the swine. Dryden.

May'st thou henceforth sweetly sleep!

Shear, swains, oh shear your softest sheep,

To swell his couch!

Gay.

O'er the congenial dust enjoin'd to shear

The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear. Pope.

2. To cut by interception.

The sharp and toothed edge of the nether chap strikes into a canal cut into the bone of the upper:
and the toothed protuberance of the upper into a canal in the nether: by which means he easily sheers the grass whereon he feeds. Grew.

To SHEAR. v. n. [In navigation.] To make an indirect course.

SHEAR. } n. f. [from the verb. It is SHEARS. } seldom used in the singular, but is found once in Dryden.]

1. An instrument to cut, consisting of two blades moving on a pin, between which the thing cut is intercepted. Shears are a larger, and scissors a smaller, instrument of the same kind. Pope uses shears for scissors.

Alas! thought Philoclea to herself, your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings that already is flown away. Sidney.

Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?

Think you I bear the shears of destiny?

Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakspeare.

The fates prepar'd their sharpen'd sheers. Dryden.

When the fleece is shorn,

Then their defenceless limbs the brambles tear;

Short of their wool, and naked from the sheer. Dryden.

That people live and die, I knew,

An hour ago, as well as you;

And if fate spins us longer years,

Or is in haste to take the shears,

I know, we must both fortunes try,

And bear our evils, wet or dry. Prior.

How happy should we be if we had the privilege of employing the sheers, for want of a mint, upon foreign gold, by clipping it into half-crowns! Swift.

Fate urg'd the shears, and cut the sylph in twain,
But airy substance soon unites again. Pope.

Beneath the shears they felt no lasting smart;

They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart. Gay.

2. The denomination of the age of sheep.

When sheep is one shear, they will have two broad teeth before; when two shear, four; when three, six; when four, eight; and, after that, their mouths break. Mortimer.

3. Any thing in the form of the blades of shears.

4. Wings, in Spenser.

Two sharp-wing'd sheers:

Decked with divers plumes, like painted jays,

Were fix'd at his back to cut his airy ways. Spenser.

SHEARD. n. f. [reapd, Saxon.] A fragment. It is now commonly written shard, and applied only to fragments of earthen-ware.

In the bursting of it, not a sheerd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water out of the pit. Isaiah.

SHE'ARER. n. f. [from shear.] One that clips with shears; particularly one that fleeces sheep.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,

Than how to scramble at the shearers feast,

And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.

Was he to be led as a lamb to the slaughter, patient and resigned as a sheep before her shearers? Rogers.

SHEA'RMAN. n. f. [shear and man.] He that shears.

Thy father was a plaisterer,

And thou thyself a shearman. Shakspeare.

SHEA'RWATER. n. f. [laurus niger.] A fowl. Ainsworth.

SHEATH. n. f. [scæðe, Saxon.] The case of any thing; the scabbard of a weapon.

The dead knight's sword out of his sheath he drew,
With which he cut a lock off all their hair. P. Qu.
Doth not each look a bath of lightning feel,
Which spares the body's sheath, yet melts the steel?
Clearwelland
Swords by the lightning's subtle force distill'd,
And the cold sheath with running metal fill'd.
Addison.

To SHEATH. } v. a. [from the noun.]
To SHEATHE. }

1. To enclose in a sheath or scabbard; to enclose in any case.

This, drawn but now against my sovereign's breast,
Before 'tis sheath'd shall give him peace and rest.
Waller.

In his hair one hand he wreaths,
His sword the other in his bosom sheaths. Denham.
Is this her hate to him, her love to me?
'Tis in my breast the sheaths her dagger now.
Dryden.

The left foot naked, when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheath the right.
Dryden.

The leopard, and all of this kind as goes, keeps the claws of his forefeet turned up from the ground, and sheathed in the skin of his toes, whereby he preserves them sharp for rapine, extending them only when he leaps at the prey. Grew.

2. [In philosophy.] To obtund any acrid particles.

Those active parts of a body are of differing natures when sheathed up or wedged in amongst others, in the texture of a concrete, and when extricated from these impediments. Boyle.

Other substances, opposite to acrimony, are called demulcent or mild, because they blunt or sheath those sharp salts; as pease and beans. Arbutnot.

3. To fit with a sheath.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat,
Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing.
Shakspeare.

4. To defend the main body by an outward covering.

It were to be wished that the whole navy throughout were sheathed as some are. Raleigh.

SHEATHWINGED. adj. [sheath and wing.]

the wings.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all vaginipennous or sheathwinged insects, as beetles and dorrs. Brown.

SHEATHY. adj. [from sheath.] Forming a sheath.

With a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on earwigs backs, and you may draw forth two wings. Brown.

SHE'CKLATON. n. s.

He went to fight against the giant in his robe of shecklaton, which is that kind of gilded leather with which they use to embroider the Irish jackets.
Spenser.

To SHED. v. a. [scedan, Saxon.]

1. To effuse; to pour out; to spill.

The painful service, and the drops of blood shed for my thankless country, are required
But with that surname of Coriolanus. Shakspeare.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries. Shakspeare.

For this is my blood which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. Matthew.

Some think one gen'ral soul fills ev'ry brain,
As the bright sun sheds light in ev'ry star. Davies.

Around its entry nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.

You seem'd to mourn another lover dead,
My sighs you gave him, and my tears you shed.
Dryden.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
'Tis love of honour, and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
These moss-grown domes with spiry turrets crown'd,

Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light,
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.

2. To scatter; to let fall.

Trees that bring forth their leaves late, and cast them late, are more lasting than those that sprout their leaves early, or shed them betimes. Bacon.

So the returning year be blest,
As his infant months bestow
Springing wreaths for William's brow;
As his summer's youth shall shed
Eternal sweets around Maria's head. Prior.

To SHED. v. n. To let fall its parts.

White oats are apt to shed most as they lie, and black as they stand. Mortimer.

SHED. n. s. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from shade.]

1. A slight temporary covering.

The first Aletes born in lowly shed,
Of parents base, a rose sprung from a bride. Fairfax.

Though he his house of polish'd marble build,
With Jasper floor'd, and carved cedar ciell'd;
Yet shall it ruin like the moth's frail cell,
Or sheds of reeds which summer's heat repel.
Sandys.

In such a season born, when scarce a shed
Could be obtain'd to shelter him or me
From the bleak air. Milton.

So all our minds with his conspire to grace
The Gentiles great apostle, and deface
Those state-obscuring sheds, that like a chain Seem'd to confine and fetter him again. Waller.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds
With twining osiers fenc'd, and moss their beds.
Dryden.

An hospitable house they found,
A homely shed; the roof, not far from ground,
Was thatch'd with reeds and straw together bound
Dryden.

Then out he steals, and finds where by the head
Their horse hung fasten'd underneath a shed.
Betterton.

Her various kinds, by various fortunes led,
Commence acquaintance underneath a shed. Swift.

Weak as the Roman chief, who strove to hide
His father's cot, and once his father's pride,
By casing a low shed of rural mould
With marble walls, and roof adorn'd with gold.

New reap'd; the other part sheepwalks and folds.
Milton.

SHEER. adj. [ryjn, Saxon.] Pure; clear; unmingled.

If she say, I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lying 't rogue in christendom. Shakspeare.

Sheer argument is not the talent of the man;
little wrested sentences are the bladders which bear him up, and he sinks downright, when he once pretends to swim without them. Atterbury.

SHEER. adv. [from the adjective.] Clean; quick; at once. Not now in use, except in low language.

Thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements; from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day; and with the setting sun
Dropp'd from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos. Milton.

The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite Descending, and in half cut sheer. Milton.

Receives her lord. Dryden.

3. [ecoutes, French; echoten, Dutch.] In a ship are ropes bent to the clews of the sails, which serve in all the lower fails to hale or round off the clew of the fail;
but in topfails they draw the fail close to the yard-arms. Dict.—Dryden seems to understand it otherwise.

The little word behind the back, and undoing whisper, like pulling off a sheet-rope at sea, slackens the fail. Suckling.

Fierce Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden.

4. As much paper as is made in one body.

As much love in rhyme
As could be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper,
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all. Shaksf.
When I first put pen to paper, I thought all I should have to say would have been contained in one sheet of paper. Locke.

Your books will come and right themselves. Swift.

2. A sand bank in the sea; a rock under shallow water.

Our transported souls shall congratulate each other their having now fully escaped the numerous rocks, shelves, and quicksands. Boyle.

Near the shelves of Circe's shores they run,

A dang'rous coast. Dryden.

He call'd his money in;

But the prevailing love of pelf

Soon split him on the former shelf;

He put it out again. Dryden.

3. The plural is analogically shelves; Dry- den has shelves, probably by negligence.

He seiz'd the helm; his fellows cheer'd,

Turn'd short upon the shelves, and madly steer'd.
Dryden.

SHE'LFY. adj. [from shelf.]

1. Full of hidden rocks or banks; full of dangerous shallows.

Glides by the tyren cliffs, a shelfy coast,
Long infamous for ships and sailors lost,
And white with bones. Dryden.

2. I know not well the meaning in this passage; perhaps rocky.

The tillable fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some so shelfy, that the corn hath much ado to fasten its roots. Carew.

SHELL. n. f. [ryell, reall, Sax. schale, schelle, Dutch.]

1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.

The sun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the shell of the colipile, and the abyfs as the water within it; now when the heat of the sun had pierced through the shell and reached the waters, it rarefied them. Burnet.

Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the shell of the earth. Locke.

2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.

Her women wear
The spoils of nations in an ear;
Chang'd for the treasure of a shell,
And in their loose attires do swell. Ben Jonson.

Was to Neptune recommended;
Peace and plenty spread the sails:
Venus, in her shell before him,
From the sands in safety bore him. Dryden.

The shells served as moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

He whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
At all times just but when he sign'd the shell. Pope.

3. The covering of the seeds of siliquous plants.

Some fruits are contained within a hard shell, being the seeds of the plants. Arbutnot.

SHE'LL FISH. n. f. [shell and fish.] Fish invested with a hard covering; either testaceous, as oysters; or crustaceous, as lobsters.

The shells being sound, were so like those they saw upon their shores, that they never questioned but that they were the exuviae of *shell*fish, and once belonged to the sea. Woodward.

SHELLY. adj. [from shell.]

1. Abounding with shell.

The ocean rolling, and the shelly shore,
Beautiful objects, shall delight no more. Prior.

2. Consisting of shells.

The conceit of Anaximander was, that the first men, and all animals, were bred in some warm moisture, inclosed in crustaceous skins, as lobsters;
and so continued, till their shelly prisons growing dry,
and breaking, made way for them. Bentley.

SHELTER. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is unknown: Skinner deduces it from shell; Dawies from ryclb, a shield, Saxon.]

1. A cover from any external injury or violence.

We hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakspeare.

They with the mountains now might be again

Thrown on them, as a shelter from his ire. Milton.

Heroes of old, when wounded, shelter sought;

But he, who meets all dangers with disdain,

Ev'n in their face his ship to anchor brought,

And steeple high stood propt upon the main. Dryd.

They may learn experience, and avoid a cave as the worst shelter from rain, when they have a lover in company. Dryden.

- The healing plant shall aid,
From storms a shelter, and from heat a shade. Pope.

Thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy. Psalms.
3. The state of being covered; protection; security.
Low at his foot a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd;
Which shade and shelter from the hill derives,
While the kind river wealth and beauty gives. Denham.
- Who into shelter takes their tender bloom,
And forms their minds to fly from ills to come. Young.

To SHE'LT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover from external violence.
We besought the deep to shelter us. Milton.
Those ruins shelter'd once his sacred head,
When he from Worcester's fatal battle fled,
Watch'd by the genius of this royal place. Dryden.
2. To defend; to protect; to succour with refuge; to harbour.
What endless honour shall you gain,
To save and shelter Troy's unhappy train. Dryden.
3. To betake to cover.
They sheltered themselves under a rock. Abbot.
Comfort thyself with such thoughts, chiefly when all earthly comforts fail thee: then do thou particularly retreat to those considerations, and shelter thyself under them. Atterbury.
4. To cover from notice. This seems less proper.
In vain I strove to check my growing flame,
Or shelter passion under friendship's name;
You saw my heart. Prior.

The cavern'd bank, his old secure abode. Thomson.
- SHE'LT*ERLESS. adj. [from shelter.] Harbourless; without home or refuge.
Now sad, and shelterless, perhaps, she lies,
Where piercing winds blow sharp. Rowe.
- SHE'LVING*. adj. [from shelf.] Sloping;
inclining; having declivity.
Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And built so shelving, that one cannot climb it Without apparent hazard of his life. Shakspeare.
Amidst the brake a hollow den was found,
And rocks and shelving arches vaulted round. Addison.

SHE'LVY. adj. [from shelf.] Shallow;
rocky; full of banks.

I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow. Shakspeare.

To SHEND. v. a. pret. and part. pass. shent.
[scendan, Sax. schenden, Dutch.]

1. To ruin; to spoil; to mischief.
Provide for thy wife, or else look to be shent,
Good milchcow for winter, another for lent. Tusser.
- Shepherds, should it not shent
Your rounds fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, that Colin made? Spenser.
- Such a dream I had of dire portent,
That much I fear my body will be shent;
It bodes I shall have wars. Dryden.
2. To disgrace; to degrade; to blame; to reproach.
Debateful strife, and cruel enmity,
The famous name of knighthood foully shend. Fairy Queen.
- Sore bruised with the fall, he slow uprose,
And all enraged, thus him loudly shent:
Disceal knight! whose coward courage chose
To wreck itself on beast. Fairy Queen.
- My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites;
Now in my words soever the be shent,
To give them seals never my soul consent. Shakspeare.

3. To overpower; to crush; to surpass.
She pass'd the rest as Cynthia doth shend
The lesser stars. Spenser.
4. It is, though used by Dryden, wholly obsolete.

hýnd, a keeper, Saxon, ſceapahýnd.]

1. One who tends sheep in the pasture.
I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze. Shakspeare.
A shepherd next,
More meek, came with the firstlings of his flock. Milton.

2. A swain; a rural lover.
If that the world and love were young,
And truth in ev'ry shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.
Lead up all those who heard thee, and believ'd;
'Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
And glad all heav'n with millions thou hast sav'd. Prior.

SHE'PHERDESS. n. s. [from shepherd.] A woman that tends sheep; a rural lass.

She put herself into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise lived many years; but discovering herself a little before her death, did profess herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him she first loved; and that she would rather, ten thousand times, live a shepherdess in contentment and satisfaction. Sidney.

These your unusual weeds to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front. Shakspeare.

She like some shepherdess did shew,
Who sat to bathe her by a river's side. Dryden.
His doric dialect has incomparable sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in country rustic. Dryden.

dish apparel. Sidney.

SHE'RBET. n. s. [ſharbat, Arabick.] The juice of lemons or oranges mixed with water and sugar. Diët.

They prefer our beer above all other drinks; and considering that water is with the rarest, especially in this climate, the dearest of sherberts, and plenty of barley, it would prove infinitely profitable to such as should bring in the use thereof. Sandys.

SHERD. n. s. [ſceapd, Sax.] A fragment of broken earthen ware. See SHARD.

The trivet-table of a foot was lame;
She thrusts beneath the limping leg a sherd. Dryden.

SHE'RIF. n. s. [ſc, ne geſeſa, Sax. from ſcýne, a shire, and neve, a steward. It is sometimes pronounced ſbrieve, which some poets have injudiciously adopted.]
An officer to whom is entrusted, in each county, the execution of the laws.

A great pow'r of English and of Scots
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown. Shakspeare.

Concerning ministers of justice, the high sheriffs of the counties have been very ancient in this kingdom. Bacon.

Now may'rs and ſbrievs all hush'd and fatiate lay. Pope.

SHE'RIFALTY. } n. s. [from sheriff.] The SHE'RIFDOM. } office or jurisdiction
SHE'RIFSHIP. } of a sheriff.
SHE'RIFWICK. }

There was a resumption of patents of gaols, and reannexing of them to the sheriffwicks; privileged officers being no less an interruption of justice than privileged places. Bacon.

SHE'RRIS. } n. s. [from Xeres, a town
SHE'RRIS Sack. } of Andalusia in Spain.]
SHE'RRY. } A kind of Spanish wine.

Your sherris warms the blood, which, before cold and settled, left the liver white, which is the badge of pusillanimity; but the sherris makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakspeare.
Good sherris sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish dull vapours, and makes it apprehensive. Shakspeare.

SHEW. See SHOW.

SHIDE. n. s. [from ſceadan, to divide,
Saxon.] A board; a cutting. Skinner.

SHIELD. n. s. [ſcýlb, Saxon.]

1. A buckler; a broad piece of defensive armour held on the left arm to ward off blows.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields. Shakspeare.
His pond'rous shield,

Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round,
Behind him cast; the broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon. Milton.

2. Defence; protection.

3. One that gives protection or security.
The terror of the Trojan field,
The Grecian honour, ornament, and shield,
High on the pile th' unconquer'd chief is plac'd. Dryden.

To SHIELD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a shield.

2. To defend; to protect; to secure.
Were't my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones: howe'er a woman's shape
Doth shield thee. Shakspeare.

Shouts of applause ran ringing through the field,
To see the son the vanquish'd father shield. Dryden.
Hear one that comes to shield his injur'd honour,
And guard his life with hazard of her own. Smith.

3. To keep off; to defend against.
Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations, into the sweet soil of Europe, they brought with them their usual weeds, fit to shield the cold to which they had been inured. Spenser.

My lord I must entreat the time alone.
—God shield I should disturb devotion. Shakspeare.

To SHIFT. v. n. [Of this word the original is obscure: ſkipta, Runick, is to change.]

1. To change place.
Vegetables being fixed to the same place, and so not able to shift and seek out after proper matter for their increment, it was necessary that it should be brought to them. Woodward.

2. To change; to give place to other things.

If the ideas of our minds constantly change and shift, in a continual succession, it would be impossible for a man to think long of any one thing. Locke.

3. To change clothes, particularly the linen.

She begs you just would turn you while shifts. Young.

4. To find some expedient; to act or live though with difficulty.

We cannot shift: being in, we must go on. Daniel.

Men in distress will look to themselves, and leave their companions to shift as well as they can. L'Estrange.

Since we desire no recompence nor thanks, we ought to be dismissed, and have leave to shift for ourselves. Swift.

5. To practise indirect methods.

All those schoolmen, though they were exceeding witty, yet better teach all their followers to shift than to resolve by their distinctions. Raleigh.

6. To take some method for safety.

Nature instructs every creature how to shift for itself in cases of danger. L'Estrange.

To SHIFT. v. a.

1. To change; to alter.

It was not levity, but absolute necessity, that made the fish shift their condition. L'Estrange.

Come, assist me, muse obedient;

Let us try some new expedient;

Shift the scene for half an hour,

Time and place are in thy power. Swift.

2. To transfer from place to place.

Pare saffron between the two St. Mary's days,

Or set or go shift it that knowest the ways. Tusser.

3. To put by some expedient out of the way.

I shifted him away,

And laid good 'scuses on your ecstasy. Shakespeare.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, when they are near, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof. Bacon.

4. To change in position.

Neither use they sails, nor place their oars in order upon the sides; but carrying the oar loose, shift it hither and thither at pleasure. Raleigh.

Where the wind

Veers oft, as oft she steers and shifts her sail. Milton.

We strive in vain against the seas and wind;

Now shift your sails. Dryden.

5. To change, as clothes.

I would advise you to shift a shirt: the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice. Shakespeare.

6. To dress in fresh clothes.

As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to shift me. Shakespeare.

7. To SHIFT off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.

The most beautiful parts must be the most finished, the colours and words most chosen: many things in both, which are not deserving of this care, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expressions. Dryden.

Struggle and contrive as you will, and lay your eyes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gain. Locke.

By various illusions of the devil they are prevailed on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised. Rogers.

SHIFT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.

She redoubling her blows, drave the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocency against violence. Sidney.

If I get down, and do not break my limbs, I'll find a thousand shifts to get away. Shakespeare.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move up and down in the water. More.

Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift How to regain my sever'd company, Compell'd me to awake the courteous echo, To give me answer from her mossy couch. Milton.

A fashionable hypocrisy shall be called good manners, so we make a shift somewhat to legitimate the abuse. L'Estrange.

Those little animals provide themselves with wheat; but they can make shift without it. Addison.

Our heralds are sufficiently stored with plants, and we have made a tolerable shift to reduce them to classes. Baker.

2. Indirect expedient; mean refuge; last resource.

VOL. II.

The very custom of seeking so particular aid and relief at the hands of God, doth, by a secret contradiction, withdraw them from endeavouring to help themselves, even by those wicked shifts, which they know can never have his allowance whose assistance their prayers seek. Hooker.

To say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick; So true, that he was awkward at a trick; For little souls on little shifts rely. Dryden.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautious and wily-headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts. Spenser.

Here you see your commission; this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for shifts and evasions from worldly afflictions: this is your reward, if you perform it; this your doom, if you decline it. South.

5. A woman's under linen.

SHIFTER. n. s. [from shift.] One who plays tricks; a man of artifice.

'Twas such a shifter, that, if truth were known, Death was half glad when he had got him down. Milton.

SHIFTFLESS. adj. [from shift.] Wanting expedients; wanting means to act to live.

For the poor shiftless irrationals, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are all ready furnished with such clothing. Derham.

SHILLING. n. s. [scylling, Sax. and Erse; schelling, Dutch.] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence.

Five of these pence made their shilling, which they called scilling, probably from scilingus, which the Romans used for the fourth part of an ounce; and forty-eight of these scillings made their pound; and four hundred of these pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appeareth by the last will of king Alfred. Camden.

The very same shilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days. Locke.

Who, with much pains exerting all his sense, Can range aright his shillings, pounds, and pence. Young.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand shill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinating.

I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it: I don't stand shill-I-shall-I then: if I say 't, I'll do 't. Congreve.

SHILLY. adv. [from shy.] Not familiarly; not frankly.

SHIN. n. s. [scina, Sax. schien, German.] The forepart of the leg.

I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger. Shakespeare.

The gliding lightning.

Pope.

9. To feel a quick glancing pain.

SHOOT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act or impression of any thing emitted from a distance.

The Turkish bow giveth a very forcible shoot, inasmuch as the arrow hath pierced a steel target two inches thick ; but the arrow, if headed with wood, hath been known to pierce through a piece of wood of eight inches thick.

Bacon.

2. The act of striking, or endeavouring to strike, with a missile weapon discharged by any instrument.

The noise of thy cross-bow

Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.

But come the bow ; now mercy goes to kill,

And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot;
Not wounding, pity would not let me do 't.

Shakspeare.

As a country-fellow was making a shoot at a pigeon, he trod upon a snake that bit him.

L'Estrange.

3. [scheuten, Dut.] Branches issuing from the main stock.

To Severn's roar be thine:
In short, restore my love, and share my kingdom. Dryden.

The proprieties and delicacies of the English are known to few: 'tis impossible even for a good wit to understand and practise them, without the help of a liberal education and long reading; in short, without wearing off the rust which he contracted while he was laying in a stock of learning. Dryden.

The short is, to speak all in a word, the possibility of being found in a salvable state cannot be sufficiently secured, without a possibility of always persevering in it. Norris.

To see whole bodies of men breaking a constitution; in short, to be encompassed with the greatest dangers from without, to be torn by many virulent factions within, then to be secure and senseless, are the most likely symptoms, in a state, of sickness unto death. Swift.

SHORT. adv. [It is, I think, only used in composition.] Not long.
Beauty and youth,
And sprightly hope, and short-enduring joy. Dryden.

One strange draught prescribed by Hippocrates for a short-breathed man, is half a gallon of hydromel, with a little vinegar. Arbutnot.

TO SHORTEN. v. a. [from short.]
1. To make short, either in time or space.
Because they see it is not fit or possible that churches should frame thanksgivings answerable to each petition, they shorten somewhat the reigns of their censure. Hooker.

Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you to shorten you,
For taking so the head, the whole head's length. Shakespeare.

To shorten its ways to knowledge, and make each perception more comprehensive, it binds them into bundles. Locke.

None shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war,
But in fair combat. Dryden.

War, and luxury's more direful rage,
Thy crimes have brought, to shorten mortal breath,
With all the num'rous family of death. Dryden.

Whatever shortens the fibres, by insinuating themselves into their parts, as water in a rope, contracts. Arbutnot.

2. To contract; to abbreviate.
We shorten'd days to moments by love's art,
Whilst our two souls
Perceiv'd no passing time, as if a part
Our love had been of still eternity. Suckling.

3. To confine; to hinder from progression.
The Irish dwell altogether by their sects, so as they may conspire what they will; whereas if there were English placed among them, they should not be able to stir but that it should be known, and they shortened according to their demerits. Spenser.

To be known, shortens my laid intent;
My boon I make it, that you know me not. Shakespeare.

Here, where the subject is so fruitful, I am shortened by my chain, and can only see what is forbidden me to reach. Dryden.

4. To lop.
Dishonest with lopt arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears. Dryden.

SHORTHAND. n. f. [short and hand.] A method of writing in compendious characters.
Your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score them on the stage;
Unless each vice in shorthand they indite,
Ev'n as notcht 'prentices whole sermons write. Dryden.

Boys have but little use of shorthand, and should by no means practise it, till they can write perfectly well. Locke.

In shorthand skill'd, where little marks comprise Whole words, a sentence in a letter lies. Creech.

As the language of the face is universal, so 'tis very comprehensive: no laconism can reach it: 'tis the shorthand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. Collier.

SHORTLIVED. adj. [short and live.] Not living or lasting long.
Unhappy parent of a shortliv'd son!
Why loads he this embitter'd life with shame? Dryden.

The joyful shortliv'd news soon spread around,
Took the same train. Dryden.

Some vices promise a great deal of pleasure in the commission; but then, at best, it is but shortlived and transient, a sudden flash presently extinguished. Calamy.

The frequent alterations in publick proceedings, the variety of shortlived favourites that prevailed in their several turns under the government of her successors, have broken us into these unhappy distinctions. Addison.

A piercing torment that shortlived pleasure of yours must bring upon me, from whom you never received offence. Addison.

All those graces
The common fate of mortal charms may find;
Content our shortliv'd praises to engage,
The joy and wonder of a single age. Addison.

Admiration is a shortlived passion, that immediately decays upon growing familiar with its object, unless it be still fed with fresh discoveries. Addison.

Then palaces shall rise; the joyful son
Shall finish what his shortliv'd sire begun. Pope.

SHORTLY. adv. [from short.]
1. Quickly; soon; in a little time. It is commonly used relatively of future time, but Clarendon seems to use it absolutely.
I must leave thee, love, and shortly to. Shaksp.

Thou art no friend to God, or to the king;
Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly. Shakespeare.

The armies came shortly in view of each other. Clarendon.

The time will shortly come, wherein you shall more rejoice for that little you have expended for the benefit of others, than in that which by so long toil you shall have saved. Calamy.

He celebrates the anniversary of his father's funeral, and shortly after arrives at Cumæ. Dryden.

Ev'n he, whose soul now melts in mournful lays,
Shall shortly want the gen'rous tear he pays. Pope.

2. In a few words; briefly.
I could express them more shortly this way than in prose, and much of the force as well as grace of argument depends on their conciseness. Pope.

SHORTNESS. n. f. [from short.]
1. The quality of being short, either in time or space.
I'll make a journey twice as far, t' enjoy
A second night of such sweet shortness, which Was mine in Britain. Shakespeare.

They move strongest in a right line, which is caused by the shortness of the distance. Bacon.
I will not trouble my readers with the shortness of the time in which I writ it. Dryden.

May they not justly to our climes upbraid
Shortness of night, and penury of shade? Prior.
Think upon the vanity and shortness of human life, and let death and eternity be often in your minds. Law.

2. Fewness of words; brevity; conciseness.
The necessity of shortness causeth men to cut off impertinent discourses, and to comprise much matter in few words. Hooker.

Sir, pardon me in what I have to say,
Your plainness and your shortness please me well. Shakespeare.

The prayers of the church will be very fit, as being most easy for their memories, by reason of their shortness, and yet containing a great deal of matter. Duty of Man.

3. Want of reach; want of capacity.
Whatsoever is above these, proceedeth of shortness of memory, or of want of a stayed attention. Bacon.

4. Deficiency; imperfection.
Another account of the shortness of our reason, and easiness of deception, is the forwardness of our understanding's assent to slightly examined conclusions. Glanville.

From the instances I had given of human ignorance, to our shortness in most things else, it is an easy inference. Glanville.

It may easily be conceived, by any that can allow for the lameness and shortness of translations out of languages and manners of writing differing from ours. Temple.

SHORTRIBS. n. f. [short and ribs.] The bastard ribs; the ribs below the sternum.
A gentleman was wounded in a duel: the rapier entered into his right side, slanting by his shortribs
under the muscles. Wifeman.

SHORTSIGHTED. adj. [short and sight.]
1. Unable by the convexity of the eye to see far.
Shortsighted men see remote objects best in old age; therefore they are accounted to have the most lasting eyes. Newton.

2. Unable by intellectual sight to see far.
The foolish and shortsighted die with fear
That they go nowhere, or they know not where. Denham.

Other propositions were designed for snares to the shortsighted and credulous. L'Estrange.

SHORTSIGHTEDNESS. n. f. [short and sight.]
1. Defect of sight, proceeding from the convexity of the eye.
2. Defect of intellectual sight.
Cunning is a kind of shortsightedness, that discovers the minutest objects which are near at hand, but is not able to discern things at a distance. Addison.

SHORTWAISTED. adj. [short and waist.]
Having a short body.
Ducklegg'd, shortwaisted, such a dwarf she is,
That she must rise on tip-toes for a kiss. Dryden.
